Proposed road raises concerns

by JANET HURLEY
Staff Reporter

A public meeting held to discuss the proposed Ingoldsby by-pass ended with demands for more information and the scheduling of another meeting before any decisions are made.

Although no outright opposition to the proposed road was voiced during Saturday's meeting at Minden council chambers,

"I don't think it will change the traffic," says one of the local residents.

there was a general agreement among the 25 people in attendance that more time is needed to study the issue.

The County Roads Department wants to build a 1.8 kilometre road from the entrance of the Ingoldsby landfill site, east to Lochlin Road. The road would by-pass a section of County Road 18 which runs close to the shoreline of Lake Kashagawigamog. That section of County Road 18 is in immediate need of repair, but reconstruction would cost $900,000 — almost double the amount it would cost to build a new road — and there would be an environmental danger to the trees and shoreline. The roads department would like to hand over that section of road to Anson, Hindon and Minden and construct a by-pass running 1,100 to 1,500 feet from the shoreline and across five private properties.

At the public meeting headed by county roads engineer David Valentine, concerns over traffic levels, snow removal and the environment were raised and discussed. But as the by-pass is still in the conceptual planning stage, few concrete answers were provided.

Valentine said he believed traffic along County Road 18 would decrease as drivers opted to by-pass Ingoldsby. But area residents did not agree.

"Only about a tenth of the traffic through Ingoldsby would use the new layout," said one man.

"I don't think it will change the traffic. Most people who use that road live in the area," said another.

Residents said they feared that if Anson, Hindon and Minden took responsibility of County Road 18 and the traffic level remained the same, the road would deteriorate faster because of the municipality's lower standard of maintenance. They also expressed concern that without properly upgrading the existing road, environmental damage will

Reeve wants Glamorgan to be included in Dysart

by NANCY KUZMICH

Glamorgan Reeve Bev MacDuff wants to see some major changes in Haliburton County.

Re-structuring changes, to be exact. She wants Glamorgan to amalgamate with Dysart et al and other smaller municipalities to hook up with either Dysart or Anson, Hindon and Minden.

"Personally, I think it's something county council should look at very closely if we're to look at what's best for the county and the most cost-effective for the municipality."

What prompted her to bring up the topic at Wednesday's county council meeting is the rumor of the provincial government "swapping" services with the municipalities. There's talk of the Queen's Park handing over complete responsibility for roads maintenance and in return picking up the tab for General Welfare Assistance.

MacDuff says she has a letter from Minister of Municipal Affairs Dave Cook which mentions the possibility of municipalities also resuming responsibility of public transportation and property assessment.

"For smaller municipalities, I don't know how they expect us to do this," says the reeve about the downloading. And when it comes to massive programs such as waste management, her forecast is even more dismal.

"They can't survive without an extreme burden to the taxpayer."

But an amalgamation with a larger municipality such as Dysart et al may be the answer.

"Things would be more efficient, they'd work more effectively and it would help with the downloading because there would be a broader tax base from which to share."

Dysart et al Reeve Chris

Hodgson says it would have to be a good deal for everyone involved.

"The initiative for re-structuring isn't coming from Dysart. But we're open to improving the delivery of services."

MacDuff believes the province wants to cut the number of municipalities, 849, in half so her idea is right on track. In the last municipal election, the Haliburton County Tax Coalition also said re-structuring was necessary to cut costs.

Although the plan is not new to county council, MacDuff says it's never been taken seriously. Which she thinks is too bad since her proposal will have impact on waste management, policing and road systems. But some things will never be corrected, no matter which jurisdiction they fall under.

"We know property taxes are an issue and will continue to be when I'm dead and gone! If re-structuring is not going to have a devastating effect on taxes, then ratepayers should think of it too."

Reeve MacDuff will take her proposal back to county council's October meeting.

Ministry denies interference in decisions over healthcare

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

A ministry representative working closely with the Haliburton County Planning and Development Committee in no way tries to influence the committee's decision, the manager of the Long-Term Care Division says in response to a recent Echo editorial.

"At no time has (Alan) Cavell or this office made any purposeful attempt to delay or interfere with the development of the long-term beds under construction," Dennis Ferenc writes in a letter to the committee. "Mr. Cavell has operated in good faith and has always attempted to present a number of strategies for consideration by the committee, recognizing that the committee itself will decide on the merits of options..."

"It is our opinion that maintaining clear communication with other decision-makers will help us 'fast track' the approval process which is highly complex and potentially time consuming."

Ensuring that we have the right information to present to these other people is another one of our

Silken takes everyone by surprise

She stunned the world when she beat the odds for a bronze medal in women's rowing at the recent Summer Olympics.

And she caught "Echo" staff off guard when she showed up, unannounced and medal in tow, at the newspaper's Haliburton office last Wednesday afternoon.

Silken Laumann has earned a reputation for herself of gritty determination and she demonstrated some of that when it came to being the centre of attention.

"I've had enough press!" What she wanted was the spotlight directed on her boyfriend, John Wallace, who along with his grandparents Terence and Marion Barclay of Wilberforce, accompanied Laumann to "The Echo".

"He's got a gold medal!" and indeed he did; he had brought it with him as well. Wallace was part of the eight-man rowing team from Canada which took the gold medal in their division in Barcelona. Although he's supposed to be on his way back home to Victoria, B.C., "Silken managed to pull a few strings" and he and his long-time girlfriend were enjoying a day in the Haliburton Highlands.

"It's just nice to get away from the city, from the hyper-activity," added Silken (whose name was made up by her parents).

The visit was nostalgic for Wallace. When he was growing up, summers were often spent at his grandparents' cottage on Koshlong Lake, and then in Wilberforce. "The summers at Haliburton were one of the highlights of the summer for the six grandchildren," says Mrs. Barclay. "It was a chance for us all to get together."

"Their grandfather always gave them a quarter, which was a lot of money then, and they had a whole 25 cent piece to buy what they wanted at Agnew's Store in Wilberforce."

Before coming to Haliburton, Wallace and Laumann dropped in at Agnew's which he says hasn't changed at all. "I'm not sure if that's good or bad," laughed Cathy Agnew. After signing autographs, the two Olympic medalists were taken by the Barclays to lunch at the PineStone Resort and Conference Centre. (Afterwards, the grandparents wondered if they should have taken them to the Kozy Korner, where the famigoals. Again, it is our desire to facilitate the process — not hinder it."

Ferenc and Cavell work out of a joint Ministry of Health/Ministry of Community and Social Services office in Peterborough.

The August 4 editorial said that at a recent committee meeting, at which they voted to go ahead with the Haliburton Hospital expansion, "Cavell was trying to steer the vote away from its eventual conclusion. Cavell... suggested a few changes that would have added months more to the process.... Rest assured, Cavell wasn't acting on his own; he probably was trying to get the committee to go in the direction in which the province wants. So much for consultation."

"I too was rather distressed with the editorial," Jack Brezina, committee chairman and publisher of the Minden Times, said at Tuesday's committee meeting in Gooderham. "I've come to know Alan and I know of many organizations that have benefited from his expertise."

"I felt (the editorial's) comments were unfair and unwarranted."

But Gooderham committee member Michael Collins said Ferenc's letter was "self-serving." Various ministries took a year and a half to decide to form the steering committee on long-term health care in response to the province's decision to freeze the Haliburton Hospital chronic care unit. This present committee was formed to implement the steering committee's recommendations.

Brezina said the delays might have been caused by the political process, but Collins said the riding's MPPs have always fought long and hard for the project. Cavell said there were only "two or three months when we could have had staff on earlier."

Ferenc's letter was "well deserved. People don't pay a lot of attention to that paper down here. It was a most unfortunate and unfair editorial," said Doug Campbell, a Minden representative who twice used an Echo article to support his argument. "What about attaching the beds to (Haliburton) Extendedicare," he later asked. "The Echo once said they were prepared to build the beds."

The discussion on the editorial ended when Dysart et al Reeve Chris Hodgson said "we have more important things to talk about than personalities."

Ferenc's letter is printed in its entirety as a letter to the editor.

A LACY VEIL

On Friday morning, Haliburton village was shrouded in a fine white mist, which left its calling card on countless spider webs. This one was discovered by nine-year-old Terra Shaw, a participant in Dysart's Children's Summer Recreational Program.

occur to the trees and lake from salt run off.

But Valentine insisted that the townships use considerably less salt than the County Roads Department. And in response to concerns about traffic, he said there has been talk of making dead ends.

Several people suggested alternative routes to Valentine who duly noted them for further exploration.

"We'll hold another meeting if desired," Reeve Bern Berry told those in attendance after an hour of wide-ranging discussion came to a close.

Berry also offered his support to the plan.

"I can only see advantages. If the county keeps the road, it will have to be upgraded to a higher standard and we will lose some trees and some property. If a new road goes in, it will open up the back lands...it will open them up for development for the municipality to use," he said.

Council agreed to put together a package of information and a map at the Ingoldsby General Store for everyone in the affected area to pick up and study.

While a final decision still seems a long way off, Valentine urged council and the public to deal with the issue expeditiously.

"We could avoid it for a long time if we wanted to. But we should be getting control of the property now if we want to build three to five years in the future."

Warning: cottage is tax time bomb

by JILL SAWYER

Staff Reporter

Residents of Maple and Beech Lakes may be looking at their cottages in a different light after last weekend.

Financial consultants from the Investors Group in Peterborough visited the annual meeting of the Maple and Beech Lakes Property Owners' Association and delivered the news that a cottage is a tax timebomb.

Consultants Bill Robbins and Wayne McConnachie were at the meeting to let cottagers know what to expect since the capital suggestions on how to defer the capital gains tax.

The first one would be to put the cottage in trust, which would defer payment of the capital gains tax for up to 21 years. The catch is that the cottager would have to pay registration and administration costs.

The second suggestion is to incorporate the cottage, and give shares to each member of the family. Again, some set-up costs would be involved, but then the cottage would be divided into smaller pieces. When one family member passed along shares to another family member, the gains tax exemption on second properties went into effect in February of this year. The consultants have been working with lawyers and accountants to come up with some solutions to the change in the law.

"Spend it now! Don't save anything for your kids, it's not worth it," was the reaction of one Maple Lake cottager after being told that the capital gains tax will drain the value of an inherited cottage.

Before the change, property-owners could claim a $100,000 exemption on the profits from any property sold or passed down as an inheritance. Now, the claim can't be made on any property other than a principal residence. To taxpayers, that means almost 50 per cent of the value of a second property, such as a cottage, must be paid to the government.

"Whether you sell the property or give it as an inheritance, it still means the property is being disposed of," Robbins said. "After certain expenses, 75 per cent of the sale would be taxable, which pushes the owner into a higher tax bracket."

If the property was passed along, children would have to pay the tax out of the remaining estate.

"The most obvious solution would be to sell your place in Toronto and move up here permanently," Robbins said. But most people aren't ready to do that, so the consultants had a few receiver would only pay tax on that small piece.

"The incorporation allows for long periods of tax deferral," McConnachie said. "You can will shares to anyone, but the cottage isn't ever officially disposed of."

It can cost up to $760 to set up a corporation, and the cottager would pay about $300 in administration fees after that.

The third solution is to invest in estate insurance, which would cover the tax heirs would have to pay. Robbins explained that a policy can be tailored to meet the expected tax liability.

Cottagers at the meeting weren't impressed by the numbers Robbins listed off. On a cottage bought for $100,000 and sold or inherited for $500,000, the seller or heir would have to pay about $190,000 in taxes. That includes fees for a lawyer and executor, as well as probate costs.

"You're living frugally, thinking you're putting something away for your kids, and then you find out it's all going to the government," one cottager said.

The reply from another cottager was, "Spend it now! Don't save anything for your kids, it's not worth it."

County sympathetic about Dorset dump but can offer no help

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The county will do what it can to help Sherborne et al council with its Dorset dump problems.

Only problem is, the county won't be able to do much.

"(Sherborne Reeve Ross Rabjohn) may be the only one with problems now but he won't be the only one for long," Stanhope Deputy-reeve Eleanor Harrison said at Wednesday's county council meeting. "We could be the next one going on our own."

The Ministry of the Environment has told Sherborne it must close the Dorset dump in a few months. Expansion of the site is not permissible because the county has not undergone a Waste Management Master Plan. The county had embarked on one, but then put the project on hold when it saw the consultants were heading towards a very expensive engineered site.

And yet at the same time, the Ministry has not approved other jurisdiction's WMMP.

"Sherborne will have to deal with it. The question is how do we proceed — as part of a county master plan or on our own?"

Rabjohn and fellow members of the county's waste management committee will be meeting with various Ministry representatives on September 8 at the county office. The reeve wanted county council to give him some indication of its future plans.

"We've got to justify spending the taxpayers' money," said Lutterworth Deputy-reeve Jim McMahon, referring to the $160,000 already spent on the WMMP. "You'd be questioning that amount of money being spent."

Dysart et al Reeve Chris Hodgson, who agreed with putting the plan on hold, said "Haliburton County has a small population and a lot of land. Surely we can get permission to expand our existing sites."

"I agree," said Rabjohn. "We need to argue that strongly. But we'll be in a much stronger position if we show them we're serious about reduction (of the amount of garbage being taken to the dump) and recycling."

Glamorgan Reeve Bev MacDuff said the strict new rules about landfill sites are an example of why county re-structuring is necessary. Smaller municipalities simply cannot afford to implement all the Ministry's policies on waste management. Glamorgan is having its own expensive problems with its dump.

Monk appointed to funeral board

The province of Ontario has asked a local funeral director to sit on its Funeral Services Regulatory Board.

"I'm flabbergasted," says Gordon Monk of Minden. "I'm quite honoured they have considered me. It's one of our peaks in this field."

"I feel quite good about it — but it's going to be an awful lot of work."

These are changing times in the funeral services industry, with more attention being paid to the environmental and health issues. The board sets new guidelines and makes sure the old ones are being followed. Regulating your peers is not always an easy task, Monk notes.

The position is for a two-year term, with a maximum of three terms. The 11-member board is split between lay people and funeral directors.

Granny Flats offer freedom and nearby security to seniors

by JILL SAWYER

Staff Reporter

FINDING IDEAL LIVING arrangements for an increasingly aging population is a problem that many Canadians will be facing during the next couple of decades. The ideal solution would be to create a situation that would allow seniors to live independently for as long as possible, with some help and support nearby.

Marjorie Hardy seems to have found that solution, and for her it's a perfect arrangement.

Mrs. Hardy lives in a small but spacious two-bedroom house with a large eat-in kitchen, lots of bright windows, and screened-in porches at the front and back. Her son and daughter-in-law and her two granddaughters live about 15 paces from her front door, in their own two-storey home. She has freedom and independence, and her family's help when she needs it.

This unusual setup, called a "granny flat," is based on an Australian idea for alternative housing for seniors. The granny flat is a moveable self-contained house placed on the same lot as the house of close family members.

The homes are also called "garden suites," and they're new in Canada. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is assessing the potential market for granny flats, but until municipalities can regulate them, only some rural areas have allowed them.

CMHC has started a test-market study, and will deliver about 100 granny flats to low-income seniors. One of the test houses will be delivered to Haliburton County. But until then, Mrs. Hardy lives in the only one in the area. It was surprisingly easy for her to get her house built.

Mrs. Hardy had been living in Orangeville in an apartment. Her son Doug and his wife Pat were then living in Toronto. When Doug moved back to Haliburton two years ago, he says it "just put a few miles between us."

"There were days in my apartment when I wouldn't even hear the sound of my own voice," Mrs. Hardy says.

Soon after he moved to Haliburton, Doug saw an ad for granny flats on tv. A private company in Barrie called "Granny Flats" was manufacturing small modular homes designed for seniors.

"I thought it was a tremendous idea," he says. He and his wife live in a house on forested land outside Haliburton, and there was enough space beside the house to accommodate the small dwelling advertised.

Doug started doing the legwork, calling the company and talking to his mother and his family about the idea. He says it went surprisingly smoothly.

"I didn't encounter any difficulties. There was some paperwork and an application to council, but there were no obstacles presented."

None of the Hardy's neighbors live closeby, and their house is far back from the road, surrounded by trees. Doug expected some opposition from the neighbors, because one of the stumbling blocks faced by CMHC is that many to having two dwellings on one lot.

When the Hardys were dealing with the building company, they decided to have their own siding contracted so Mrs. Hardy's house would match the main house. "We didn't want it to be an eyesore," she says.

Once the plan was underway, Doug applied for temporary rezoning, and spoke with the municipal planner to make sure everything was agreeable. "It wasn't difficult," he says. "Just time-consuming."

The house was manufactured in a factory near Belleville, and moved up in two parts. Granny flats can be built in different sizes, with different numbers of rooms. Mrs. Hardy's is 875 square feet.

The houses are built with extra-wide doors to accommodate a wheelchair, large door handles, and a bathroom equipped with safety bars. They've obviously been designed with seniors in mind.

"I think it's a tremendous idea," says Mrs. Hardy. "I've got the freedom to live on my own, and there's space for my close friends to stay if they come up for a visit. And my family is close if I do need help."

"I think there's a natural obligation to take care of my family," Doug says, "rather than having any government agencies involved."

Mrs. Hardy says that with her arrangement, she's not a "drain on the medical profession," because she has her family to help her. But both she and her family maintain their privacy.

Pat Hardy says she feels comfortable leaving in the morning to go to work, because Mrs. Hardy is there to keep an eye on her two daughters.

Doug Hardy had to get approval from Dysart council to install the granny flat, and he says he was gearing up for a fight, expecting difficulties.

"I spoke to them for maybe 10 minutes, they approved it, and then they wished me well and I was on my way."

people, particularly in urban areas, are opposed

"I think it's a tremendous idea," says Marjorie Hardy, of the 'granny flat' she lives in on the lot of her son's home.

Jody Curry, planning administrator for Dysart et al, says the Hardys' application fulfilled all the council's requirements. Granny flats aren't allowed on lakefront property or land that's been zoned for recreation. Also, plans have to be approved by the Ministry of Health, because the septic system for a granny flat is hooked up to the system at the main house.

Council will approve temporary rezoning for a granny flat for up to three years, as long as the applicants comply with these requirements. Neighbors within 400 feet of the site also have to be told about the rezoning, and have to agree with it before it is approved.

Haliburton County has been in contact with CMHC to be a part of the test market, which would mean one granny flat would be donated to a family. CMHC has said that the house would have to be leased to a low-income family with a lot large enough to accommodate it.

Mrs. Hardy hopes that by having the first granny flat in the county, she has made it easier for the next person who wants one. "I think the ground has been plowed now."

Reeves want bickering to stop

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

It was, as they say, an interesting meeting. The following are brief reports of some of the discussions, brief and lengthy, at Wednesday's county council meeting in Minden.

Warden's remarks

"Haliburton County is stuck in the mud and the back wheels are spinning. To blame one another relieves the frustration but doesn't solve the problem," George Simmons said in his opening remarks, after letting everyone know it was his 44th birthday and basking in the applause. He then remembered back to the large public meeting in 1989 when former MPP John Eakins and the Ministry of Health were taken to task for the many delays to the Haliburton Hospital expansion. After asking chief administrative officer Gary McKnight to read the motion in which county council promised $266,000 to the project, Simmons said "out of the resolution there was a commitment." That commitment is to the Haliburton Hospital.

That doesn't mean people have forgotten the needs of the Minden Hospital, whose future is uncertain given that it is an aging wooden structure. Simmons' late brother was the first baby born at the hospital, and his mother worked fervently to improve the facilities. Now, he wants to call on that same type of strength and willingness to work for the betterment of the community.

You have to be able to read between the lines to understand Simmons' comments.

The Haliburton County Planning and Development Committee has voted to go ahead with the Haliburton expansion, against the wishes of the Minden members who fear there won't be enough money left in the pot for their village's needs. Where to build beds is turning into a competition between the two communities. "It bothers me that we are being torn apart, village against village," Simmons said. "The delay (of construction) is calling us into a 'crudmire.' We need to have a goal of what we want to achieve."

"We should get past this bickering," agreed Dysart et al. Reeve Chris Hodgson who stressed once again that the Haliburton expansion was only a first step. Besides, he added, "there's more to Haliburton County than Haliburton and Minden."

Glamorgan Reeve Bev MacDuff agreed the beds should first be built in Haliburton. "That's what the (fundraising money) is designated for and that's what we should do with it, and then look at what we can do for Minden."

"This is a matter of how to do them all, not which (project) to do," said Sherborne et al. Reeve Ross Rabjohn, agreeing with Hodgson.

"I hope you're not going to ask us for a resolution," one councillor quipped to Simmons.

Show of hands

Simmons buried himself even deeper in the crudmire at the end of the meeting. Along with the furor over hospitals, there's the touchy subject of market value assessment, which county council will vote on in October.

"I've had a problem. When you walk through that door, which is more important to you, the county or municipality?" His request for a show of hands of councillors who put the county's interests first received a show of embarrassed bewilderment.

"I don't think you'll get an honest answer here," said Bicroft Reeve Hans Stevens. "I represent my municipality at county council, but here we have to compromise and do what's best for the county."

Bicroft has already implemented MVA so it would appreciate a county-wide re-assessment. But reeves of other municipalities are under great pressure to turn it down. "If you're not looking at being re-elected, you know it's best for the county." If the county supports Bicroft on MVA, then Bicroft supports the county on other issues, such as waste management.

"In some situations, the county has to set direction," said Rabjohn. "In other situations we must represent our municipalities. It's a back and forth sort of thing, it's not a or b."

Because MVA is good for the county, Simmons believes county councillors should vote in favour of it at the county level. To be implemented, MVA must be passed by six of the 10 municipalities. This second vote is county councillors' opportunity to put their municipality's interests first. "You should be thinking county when you come through that door."

"It's a matter of interpretation about what you think is best for the county," said Anson, Hindon and Minden Reeve Bern Berry.

One down

At least no one can bicker about the goings on at management committee meetings — there is no management committee any more. Hodgson, the committee's chairman, was fulfilling one of his election promises when he suggested doing away with the committee altogether. It was made up of all the reeves, who met in the morning before a county council meeting. Often, they didn't know ahead of time what was on the agenda and then, over lunch, they were expected to brief their deputy-reeve on the issues for the afternoon's vote. Not only was there little chance for preparation, but there was criticism that the most lively debates took place in the morning during the closed meeting, and the public got melba toast in the afternoon.

This month, deputies were invited to take part in the management committee. They were there long enough to vote it out of existence.

From now on, county council meetings will start at 10 in the morning instead of 1:30 p.m. The meeting will go in-camera to discuss personnel and property and legal matters.

"It's one of our first chances to do away with our job," said Hodgson, who's often at a meeting a day.

Stanhope Reeve Fred Gardner thanked Hodgson for a short job well done.

Is it feasible?

County council voted in favour of going ahead with a feasibility study which will explore the possible amalgamation of Hyland Crest and the Minden Hospital. The study's costs will be borne by the Ministry of Health. It was also noted that contrary to many people's impressions, the study was not the idea of Frank Lussing. Lussing is the executive director of Peterborough's St. Joseph's Hospital, which owns both the Minden and Haliburton Hospitals. The idea sprang from Doug Campbell, a Minden representative on the Planning and Development Committee.

Meanwhile, Hyland Crest has hired three RNAs, and is in the midst of interviews for two more RNA positions in accordance with new funding procedures. As well, the tub room is expected to be completed by mid-September, at which time displaced residents can be returned to their rooms and three new residents can be admitted.

Money on roads

By the end of July, the county's roads department had spent $1.6-million, and $1.2-million of that went towards payroll and equipment rentals. Independent local workers also gained $535,000 in pay-cheques. The county hires 24 full-time employees and 22 part-time employees.

No road now

Minden had suggested it could build a Hunter Street extension to provide another access to Hyland Crest. Hyland Crest's management committee voted against approving the extension at this time. By accepting the committee's minutes, county council would be accepting the decision. To add emphasis to this, Bern Berry asked that county council draft a motion explicitly saying it did not presently support the extension. After considerable debate about whether such a motion was necessary, Berry was the only one to vote against it — the motion said council was not in favour "at this time" and Berry wanted it to say council would "defer" a final decision. Other councillors said the two said the same thing.

County waiting to hear about retraining program

by JILL SAWYER

Staff Reporter

Haliburton County could be in line to receive part of $1-billion in provincial funds for a retraining program for the unemployed, but the county's community and social services director says people "shouldn't get too excited yet."

The money has been set aside for a pilot project called the Jobs Ontario Training Fund, which is expected to create an estimated 90,000 private sector jobs across the province.

But the provincial Ministry of Community and Social Services has yet to finish deciding which communities will receive the funding.

The retraining program would be available to welfare recipients and people whose unemployment insurance has run out. Funding would be available to employers who agreed to create a new position, and train a new worker to do that job. The government would pay up to 35 per cent of the employee's wages.

Morris Honeyman, Haliburton County's director of community and social services, says he's still waiting to find out if this county will be accepted for the program.

"It's still really up in the air. Nobody knows what's going to happen."

Because the funding program is a pilot project, the province wants to start it in very different communities to see how different areas adapt to it. "They're looking at inner cities, rural counties, and small towns," Honeyman says. "Each one could work very differently."

The program is targeting all types of community development, such as co-ops, small businesses, self-employment ideas, and development in native communities. At least half the money would be applied to retraining, while the other half would be applied to wages.

If Haliburton County is selected, a broker for the program would have to be named, such as a local employment agency or community organization. The broker would be responsible for administering the program, finding eligible employers, and connecting workers with jobs. Administration costs would be charged to the province.

Honeyman's office got a call from the ministry last week, to acknowledge that Haliburton County had applied for the funding. "They just called to say they hadn't forgotten about us," he says.

Honeyman doesn't know how many other communities have applied for the program. The District of Muskoka has already been approved to receive about $2-million for job creation and retraining, but Honeyman says that's understandable because Muskoka is bigger than Haliburton.

He also says that even if the government approves the program for Haliburton, his office will have to study it to make sure it will work.

"It could be beneficial, but if they're not offering enough of a subsidy then it will burn right out." He says that if the province is only offering 35 per cent of the retraining and wage costs, then employers might not apply because they may not be able to cover the remaining 65 per cent.

Honeyman says he expects to know whether Haliburton has been approved by the end of next month. "Right now we're trying to get them to answer some of our questions. But I just wanted the county to know that this program is out there. There's no guarantee that we'll get it, but they'll let us know."

EDITORIAL

It is, after all, a distance of only 24 kilometres. The people share a common past and common experiences. There is no religious or ethnic strife. No one's honour has been impugned. So why are some people trying to drive a wedge between Minden and Haliburton villages? When you stand outside of it, the competition between the two villages seems so silly and useless. It started when Haliburton got the railway and Minden got the county town designation, and people have been keeping score ever since. But when you look at what's going on in the world — what's happening when petty grievances get blown into full-scale war and historical injustices and perceived wrongs threaten to split a country — and then you listen to the local bickering, you have to ask "Who cares?" If villages get the debates they deserve, then Haliburton and Minden are self-centred, narrow-minded and easily threatened. Let's pray some real catastrophe doesn't strike.

A year ago, the steering committee on long-term healthcare said this county immediately needs 40 long-term care beds and then gave four options, basically splitting the beds between Minden and Haliburton, the only villages in the county with the infrastructure to support such facilities. At the time, this editorial space said those options were a time bomb which would only serve to set off the rivalry. The committee should have used the reams of information it had spent 18 months collecting to make a decision about what was best for this county. Today, the Haliburton County Planning and Development Committee, which is to implement the recommendations of the steering committee, spends three-quarters of its time trying to put a civil face on the increasingly bitter tug of war.

Minden feels a very real threat to its hospital. But why, in an attempt to protect the hospital, would some people in Minden be willing to jeopardize a long-term care facility which was intended to serve all the people of Haliburton County? The two facilities have nothing to do with one another. Minden's hospital is for acute care and emergencies. The Haliburton Hospital expansion is for people who have ongoing needs. The $2.3-million the province has promised is for long-term care beds. Long-term care. The committee honoured the principle of splitting the beds by setting aside only half the money for the Haliburton project. It was ethically justified in committing all the money raised in the 1989 campaign to the Haliburton project, because after all, that's what the money was raised for. The people of Harcourt, Wilberforce, Tory Hill, Gooderham, Eagle Lake and West Guilford weren't asked to support an expansion at Hyland Crest in Minden. Haliburton is much more central to their needs. Once that facility is built and people's faith in government promises is restored, the people of Haliburton would be more than willing to rally behind Minden to fight for the hospital services it so rightly deserves. But let's do things one step at a time.

What's so frustrating about this whole thing is that the rivalry is masking the real issue: the planning and development committee is spending precious time and money re-inventing the wheel. What is being said today as a justification for more studies is exactly what was said three years ago when the steering committee was formed to placate the public. The steering committee was supposed to determine the county's needs. Now, two years later, that's exactly the role of this newest committee. The same arguments are being heard, the same information is presented. No one is saying this isn't a legitimate task, but the question is why have we been fooling ourselves all along, believing that the community was being asked to decide where the beds should go. The Ministry of Health already has enough statistics. It also knows what the government would be willing to fund. Maybe it's addressing the needs of other communities while it waits for Haliburton County to get this tantrum over with.

Ministry dispells concerns

TO THE EDITOR

FROM OUR READERS

Editor's note: The following letter was sent to Jack Brezina, chairman of the Haliburton County Planning & Development Committee in response to the Echo editorial of August 4.

Dear Mr. Brezina:

I was compelled to write this letter to you and the committee as a result of a recent editorial in a local newspaper. It is my wish that you share my letter with your committee in order to dispel any concerns that the editorial may have raised.

Firstly, I want to commend you and the committee members on your deliberations to date. A great deal of information and history has been made available to you in a short period of time. I am impressed with the way the committee has dealt with the complexities of the issues, and some of the creative options which you have explored. Alan Cavell, from this office, has been an ongoing resource to the committee and has kept me fully apprised of your discussions.

I want it made perfectly clear that at no time has Mr. Cavell or this office made any purposeful attempt to delay or interfere with the development of the long-term care beds under discussion. It is the responsibility of the Ministry to provide as much information as possible and to table several options for exploration by the committee to facilitate an open planning process. It is my strong belief that your committee and this office share a common goal — the creation of the best services for seniors and disabled persons in Haliburton County given the scarce resources available. I admit that there have been some delays, but these have not been significant given the complexity of the task; for it is easy to underestimate how complex the issues are which need to be resolved.

Mr. Cavell, in my opinion, has operated in good faith and has always attempted to present a number of strategies for consideration by the committee, recognizing that the committee itself will decide on the merits of options. I wish the committee to know that Mr. Cavell and others from the Ministry have spent many hours "behind the scenes" advising others within the Ministry. It is our opinion that maintaining clear communication with other decision-makers will help us "fast-track" the approval process which is highly complex and potentially time-consuming. Ensuring that we have the right information to present to these other people is another one of our goals. Again, it is our desire to facilitate the process — not hinder it.

It is with regret that I inform the committee of Mr. Cavell's resignation from the Ministry in order to accept his new responsibilities as administrator at Victoria Manor Home for the Aged in Lindsay. I personally will miss the breadth of knowledge Mr. Cavell has of the long-term care field, and especially his knowledge of the programs and services in Haliburton County. It is my intention to continue to provide resources to your committee to ensure that we continue in the most efficient and effective way possible to put the much needed services in place. A replacement for Mr. Cavell on your committee will be announced very shortly.

In closing, I regret any concern or misperception caused by the recent editorial with respect to the support from the Ministry. If at any time you or the committee feel that support is required I ask that you contact my office directly in order to avoid any misunderstandings. The task of planning and providing the best and most appropriate services to meet community needs is extremely important. I am confident that you will continue to make recommendations based on facts and principles and not on the perception of others.

I look forward to our continued working relationship with the committee, and I am extremely pleased with how close we are to the next phase of the implementation process.

D. W. Ferenc, Manager, Ministry of Health/Ministry of Community and Social Services

We recently received a press release regarding the Kingston Hockey Club, of which Wren Blair is a managing partner. Blair, who was born — where else — in Blairhampton started the PineStone Resort and Haliburton Hockey Haven. When he was general manager of the Minnesota North Stars, he brought the team to Haliburton for the first summer training camp. Here's the press release:

MANAGING PARTNER Wren Blair announced that he has signed Brett Lindros to an agreement with the Kingston Frontenac Hockey Club.

The talented right winger will join the Club at their Training Camp which opens at the Kingston Memorial Centre on Thursday September 3rd, 1992.

A press conference will be held in Kingston on Thursday August 27th where all details regarding the signing will then be made available to the media and the public.

Attending the press conference will be Brett Lindros and his parents Carl and Bonnie Lindros together with the owners of the Club, Blair and Manager/Coach David Allison and members of the Media. All parties have indicated that no further information will be available from any source until the Press Conference is held in Kingston.

Lindros was claimed by the Frontenacs as the second player taken in the O.H.L. Draft held in June in Toronto.

Meetings between the Lindros' and Blair have been ongoing for the last three or four weeks. Blair described the meetings as friendly, intelligent and very complimentary to the Frontenacs and the City of Kingston. They did have many items to address and this has taken time.

"They are an extremely close and warm family," "I have come to like them a great deal" said Blair "and naturally we are extremely excited as I'm sure everyone in Kingston is that Brett will be a Kingston Frontenac this year.

Bob Mitchell of the Toronto Star writing on behalf of the Star Fresh Air Fund reports that Mike Callaghan never had much of an opportunity to play hide-and seek when he was growing up because his spina bifida confined him to a wheelchair. The 17-year-old from Belleville got to do that and much more at Kilcoo Camp on the shores of Gull Lake, near Minden. Swimming, going on a four-day canoe trip, scaling 4.5 metres (15 feet) up the camp's climbing tower and getting bumped and banged while playing floor hockey are some of the activities that made a big impression on him. "This camp's motto should be 'never say never' because even if you are disabled, they allow you to try things here," said Callaghan, one of seven disabled campers who recently attended the mainstream camp, living in a specially equipped cabin known as Camp Awakening. The Kilcoo Camp Awakening was founded in 1982 and is one of more than 80 residential and day camps receiving financial support this summer from the Star Fresh Air Fund.

Greer, who broke the bone above the knee in a collision with a Minden player, will need surgery.

Zen and the art of singsong

DAVID CARROLL

PINE POINT, KENNISIS LAKE: August is campfire season. Every night we watch the dots of light flare up along the southern shore. Sometimes, when the wind is right, we can hear revelers singing on the far side of the lake, half a mile away.

"Kind of nice, isn't it?" said Arthur White, campfire enthusiast. "You don't hear folks singing so often anymore."

Arthur is forty-nine years old. He's a single father, an anti-drug crusader, a small businessman, and lead guitarist for the underground Toronto band, The Vomiting Wahos.

Yes, I said 'Vomiting'. As in 'Hurling'.

"We're not actually underground," Arthur explained as he arranged the stone fireplace. "Underground" implies that we have a following. We don't. With luck, we'll be underground within a few years."

The Wahos' repertoire includes cover versions of songs by obscure bands such as the Angelic Upstarts, Quibbling Siblings, Eek A Mouse, and Attacked by Furniture. It's not music that's likely to get them on the charts, but it's what Arthur loves to play. "I may not be Pete Townshend," he said candidly, "but I do my best and I make people happy. That's what's important."

The fire started to crackle. Sparks rose up and danced against the curtain of trees. "Play the frog song, Daddy!" cried Becky, Arthur's four-year-old daughter.

The Frog Song?

The Frog Song, as Arthur proceeded to explain, is a tune he wrote on the day Becky was born, some four years before. "She looked just like a frog," he recalled.

"Play it, Daddy! Pleeeeeeze?"

Smiling benevolently, Arthur picked up his guitar. He strummed two sharp, shrill chords and then three murky ones. Not surprisingly, the result sounded like a swampful of croaking frogs. American bullfrogs, to be precise.

"That's my song," Becky asserted when the song was finished. Then she fited away to gather some kindling.

"She thinks I'm weird," Arthur sighed when she was out of earshot. "In a year or two she'll grow up and hate me, I'm sure, and that's why I'm having as many campfires as I can with her now." Arthur puts his guitar back in its case. "You know," he said, "children are our most valuable asset. They're so innocent and honest — they have nothing to do with the problems of the world. They have nothing to do with war, greed, pollution or bigotry. Kids like to sing and have fun. They're just like the frogs, that way. That's what I was thinking of when I wrote that song."

I secretly wondered why a devoted family-man would play for a band called the Vomiting Wahos, so I said: "Aren't you a little old to be playing in bars?"

"The man who doesn't sweat, doesn't live," Arthur replied, simply.

When not at his cottage, Arthur works at his antique store in North York, refinishing bookshelves and caning old chairs.

"That's not work," he corrected me. "That's relaxing. I'm lucky, I love my work. I love talking to my customers. Most of them are old as the hills, but every one of them is different; every one of them has a story to tell. Not many folks bother listening to old people, but I do. They have so much to teach us, but nobody pays attention. That's the problem with this world. Too many folks are sitting at their own campfire, trying to shut out everyone else. What we need is one great big campfire, instead of five billion little ones. That way, everyone would have a chance to sing."

When I mentioned that campfires were illegal except when used for cooking or warmth, Arthur was quick to offer me a marshmallow.

"There you go," he said. "We're cooking."

I accepted it gratefully and skewered it on a stick.

The campfire turned to embers. Arthur looked at the moon, took off his glasses, and said: "Life has given me much more than I'll ever be able to give in return."

Becky rested her head on her father's lap. I longed for another char-broiled marshmallow but Arthur said no.

"We've got to save them," he whispered. "Plenty more campfires to come, you know."

So if you should hear strange sounds emanating from Kennisis's south shore late at night, don't give it a second thought. It's only Arthur and Becky, singing with the frogs.

The visitors from hell arrive

SHARON LYNCH

WE CAN LAUGH about it now," Lisa said, leaning back in her lawn chair to catch as much of the fleeting sun as possible.

"But at the time, well, that was another story. We were really angry." She nodded her head in agreement with her husband James. This first summer at their new cottage, the Clarkes had undergone a kind of baptism by fire. Now that the season was winding down, they were able to reflect back with a philosophical outlook. "The worse was definitely the visitors from hell."

Here their three children heaved a collective groan. No one had to tell them to whom their parents referred. "We were warned that once we bought a cottage, all our friends would want to come for a visit," James explained. "We even looked forward to them coming, which shows you how green we really were."

It was Friday morning of the summer's first long weekend. Lisa was running around making certain she had not forgotten anything while James was outside raking the remnants of last fall's leaves. They wanted their friends to get a good first impression of their new cottage, then, with a roar of engines to signal the arrival, three cars and a mini-van pulled up to the back of the cottage. Before James or Lisa had time to step forward and welcome their guests, the doors were flung open as though on a pre-arranged signal and seven children of various sizes tumbled out, scattering in all directions.

"They were like a horde of locusts," shuddered Lisa in retrospect. Barely acknowledging the Clarke youngsters, the newcomers immediately set to exploring everything within a half kilometre radius. They peered in windows, walked across decks, trampled through flower beds. Neither James nor Lisa were yet aware of what the children were up to. They were too busy helping the adults haul luggage into the suddenly overcrowded cottage.

It had been agreed that everyone was to bring tents so that the children could sleep outside and the adults have the cottage. Kids love the adventure of tenting, it was reasoned and with a total of ten adults and ten children combined with a three bedroom cottage, it seemed a sensible plan. "Oh no," stated a visiting mom. "Sorry, but our pumpkin has to stay inside with us." The woman's tone was firm. Lisa bit her tongue. Her own children were giving up their rooms for a tent and now 'pumpkin' was getting special treatment. But she let it pass.

All 10 adults were just getting settled on the deck, cool drinks in hand, when the eldest Clarke daughter came racing up the steps. Three of the bigger boys had just sunk the neighbours' dock. First two of them had got it rocking fiercely from side to side and when the third one joined in, the dock went under.

The parents seemed unconcerned. "Boys will be boys," remarked one father before turning to James to ask about the fishing. Lisa decided to check out the dock situation but froze as soon as she reached the bottom of the deck steps. Two more young visitors were busy pitching horse-shoes. Besides being too young for such activity, the horseshoe pit belonged to the neighbour on the other side and they were seated having lunch not six feet away, looking at the youngsters in bewilderment.

It soon became obvious the adults had come to the Clarke cottage to sit and enjoy themselves without a care of the actions of their offspring. James and Lisa spent most of the day on the run, repeating the word 'don't' at least a hundred times to seemingly deaf children. The parents suffered from the same affliction, able to gaze over the tranquil bay completely oblivious to the scraped knees, broken paddles and thinning nerves around them.

The next night 'pumpkin' agreed to sleep in a tent with the others. Her parents had neglected to bring a sleeping bag however so helped themselves to one they found in the cottage. Lisa saw her new down sleeping bag trailing halfway out of the tent the following morning. When she bent over to pick it up, she realized that 'pumpkin' had had an accident during the night. Her mouth set in a firm line of resolve, Lisa headed for the deck and 'pumpkin's' parents.

However, before she could make it one of 'pumpkin's' brothers bumped into her, asking where 'their' fishing rods and 'their' boat had disappeared to. "Our fishing rods and our boat are off limits to you kids since you dropped the tackle box in the middle of the lake yesterday," she explained, wondering when ownership of everything had suddenly been transferred to the young guests.

Although everyone was supposed to have brought food to pool together for the weekend, one couple, perhaps not willing to share with the masses, had brought their own special bread, special vegetable and special meat. As a result, when the food was laid out beside the barbeque that night, two perfect filet mignons were forced to rub shoulders with a dozen or so hamburgers. Their owners sat by the table, waiting for James to cook the steak for them.

By the end of the second day, Lisa and James felt as though they were in the middle of a Chevy Chase movie. The children continued to run wild from cottage to cottage along the bay. It didn't matter that the adult Clarkes were now quite hoarse from calling the youngsters because their pleas had not been heeded in any event. The younger Clarkes had been drawn into shifting alliances and feuds over the past two days with nothing to show for the upheaval but broken toys and a lost tackle box.

When the final day dawned grey and rainy, all five Clarke's were more than a little pleased. Hoping it would encourage the visitors to make an early exit, they were not disappointed. In fact, it was with great enthusiasm they helped carry the luggage out to the three cars and mini-van. "I still like the cottage," said the youngest Clarke. "I just don't want any more visitors from hell."

PERISCOPE

MARTHA PERKINS

DURING A SUNDAY MORNING drive to Dorset, I got goosebumps listening to the radio reports of Silken Laumann's bronze medal finish in the Olympics. Alone in my truck, I sent a silent message of congratulations to her. Like many other people who heard of her story, I had desperately wanted her to win, not for any false notion of national pride or shared glory, but because her struggle against adversity had taken on truly Olympian proportions. Hercules was born again as a woman rower. What ore her medal was made of didn't matter; she'd always be first among people who value such determination and sacrifice.

There aren't many people I admire. There are many people to like, quite a few to respect, but admiration is bestowed on only a handful. That Silken Laumann is a sports figure makes her even more rare a symbol of my admiration. I don't have a television, so I've never seen her row. All I know about her is what I've read in newspapers. Sports usually leaves me cold unless it is about the psychology of the game and the players — the death of a hockey player or millionaire basketball stars who sell their soles to the devil and then wrap themselves in the glory of amateur sport.

But when I missed by four minutes Laumann, her boyfriend John Wallace and his grandparents, Terence and Marion Barclay of Wilberforce, when they dropped by the Echo office last week, I was almost sick with disappointment and self-recrimination.

Laumann has put millions of New Year's Resolutions to shame. She set a goal for herself, and then wouldn't accept any excuses — either from herself or from others — about why she couldn't reach it. This goal was a physical one, but you sensed that her determination will translate well in any endeavour she puts her mind to.

That's why there's so much interest in the question "How did you do it? Where does your stamina come from? Why didn't you take what fate had given you as a sign that perhaps you're not meant to compete in the Olympics? Why didn't you act like most people would and call it quits?" (Little did she know that winning a medal would result in having her psyche probed for clues to the meaning of life.)

People are searching for two answers. They either want Laumann to provide some secret formula which they could then apply to their own lives — "when I get up in the morning I say 'I think I can' three times and then read my horoscope" — or they want her to provide them with an excuse for why they can't reach such heights — "I'm a good rower because I'm 5'10" and have blonde hair."

We want an easy alternative to those five o'clock in the morning practices and the willingness to put the rest of your life on hold for training. Magazines which offer the diet of the month know this. ("Eat whatever you want and still lose 10 kilos in a week! The secret is loving yourself as much as you love food!") Fitness clubs and manufacturers know this when they show a smiling, non-sweaty and what's-she-got-to-worry-about woman working out effortlessly on some amazing machine guaranteed to develop muscles in five minutes.

When most people say they're doing something for themselves, they usually mean hour-long baths after the kids are in bed, buying a box of chocolates after a gruelling week of work, or taking the phone off the hook and reading a favourite magazine in a favourite chair. They don't intend to do anything that will cause immense physical pain and discomfort. Yet such was the price of Laumann's self-fulfilment. To find personal happiness, she deliberately made her lungs to burn, her muscles scream and her brain yell "no more!" Every time she got into that boat, she knew she'd be in pain before she got out again. Genuine national pride notwithstanding, she didn't put herself through all this to "win one for the Gipper" or wrap herself in the maple leaf. She did it because she had to; that was the only way she could attain the goal she had set for herself.

Who can help but admire Silken Laumann? In today's world, idealism is an old-fashioned and quaint notion. You do things because you get paid to do them or because you're not yet in the position to tell others to do it for you. Yet she trained and trained and trained because she thought the result would be worth it. It was, for her and for everyone who watched with pride.

Now if we can just get a little bit of that bronze to rub off on us.

Ted's Pals Hockey Clinic lets young players get a head start on the season

by LAURA CAMPBELL
Special to the Echo

"It's the greatest game in the world. I'm 45 and still have fun bumping and grinding with the younger players," says Ted Glendinning as he gets ready for another season of hockey.

To kick off the year Glendinning is once again hosting Ted's Pals Hockey Clinic at the Dysart Arena Aug. 31 - Sept. 4. "I started it last year because I saw a need for local kids to have a school that didn't cost a lot of money. For example, it's $800 for one week at some of the larger schools," compared to Glendinning's where it's $60 for early registration and $75 after June 26.

The clinic is open to kids of all ages who want to learn or improve their skills and get a head start on the season. It is well organized with each age group being divided into three sub-groups, depending on their individual ability. Each age group spends one and a half hours a day on the ice developing various skills. Half an hour is spent on each balance and agility, puck handling and competitive skills. As well Glendinning offers individual attention. "Any child who doesn't fit in on a certain drill, I'll take aside and work with one on one."

To help run the program, Glendinning has his own team which includes Brian Mulholland, Ron Yake, Tim Davies, Blair Cooper, Stewart Baker and Glen Sharply. Their philosophy for the game of hockey, as well as the clinic, is that to produce winners kids need to feel some success, have fun and learn some skills.

One bright-eyed, eager player is Glendinning's youngest son Cole who is anxious to lace up his skates for another season. This is his fourth year playing hockey and feels that through the clinic "you can pick up something to make you better. As well, it gets you back in shape for try-outs."

As for Ted's Pals Hockey Clinic it looks like it's going to be an even better year and promises to continue to grow in the future. Glendinning himself hopes to continue to be involved in minor hockey for many years to come. "One day I would like to coach full or part-time when I retire to take away the boredom. I just have fun watching kids grow up and reliving my childhood."

"I started it last year because I saw a need for local kids to have a school that didn't cost a lot of money," says Ted Glendinning, host of Ted's Pals Hockey Clinic, here with his son Cole.

Game one of the Haliburton County men's fastball finals on Sunday saw West Guilford take on the visiting Gooderham Bears. In a pitching duel between Guilford's Wade Stamp and Gooderham's Paul Smith, West Guilford managed to edge past the Bears by a score of 5-4.

West Guilford ended the regular season in first place, with a record of eight wins, one loss and two ties, and Gooderham posted a sixth place record of seven wins and four losses. In their only meeting during the regular season, Guilford beat Bears by a score of 8-7.

On Sunday, West Guilford hit the score board early; Bob Johnston scored from third in the first inning and John Ballentine added a solo home run in the second.

In the third inning Roland Greber, the Bears' right fielder, drove in the first of three runs with a single, bringing home Jason Billings. Stamp tied the game in the bottom of the third, with a bases-loaded single and Ballentine had his second RBI of the night with a sacrifice fly to put West Guilford ahead 4-3.

The Bears tied the game again in the sixth inning, when Ron Mintz scored on a triple and a passed ball.

Gooderham failed to take advantage of Greber's seventh inning leadoff bunt, who was tagged out at first base. In a dramatic seventh inning West Guilford rally, Stamp hit a single to right field, driving in Jim Wynn from second base, who was pinch running for Floyd Henry, to win the game by a score of 5-4.

Gooderham will try to avenge the loss in Game Two of the series at 1:00 next Sunday in Gooderham.

Reeve wants expansion now

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The following are brief reports of items discussed by the Haliburton County Planning and Development Committee, which met last Tuesday in Gooderham. The committee has been formed to implement the recommendations of the steering committee on long-term healthcare. The province has committed $2.3-million to build up to 30 long-term care beds. The committee, with the exception of the Minden representatives, voted in favour of starting with the expansion at the Haliburton Hospital, for which $400,000 was raised publicly.

Get on with it

Dysart et al Reeve Chris Hodgson wants construction to start on the Haliburton expansion this spring, using a modified version of the existing architect's plans. The plans cost $400,000 and he doesn't want the money to be wasted. "Don't name the beds but build the facility and let (the Ministry of Health) determine the best use for the beds."

"Acute care beds are not part of this," cautioned Jim Wrigley, a Ministry resource person. He had "never heard" of the Ministry building an addition without knowing what type of patient would be using the facility.

"Does that mean the number of acute care beds (already existing) is a given," asked Hodgson. "We're not talking about altering that," Wrigley replied. At most there will be seven adult and two pediatric beds at the Minden Hospital, whatever shape it takes. Will there be fewer beds, Hodgson asked. Wrigley said "if the study (investigating the feasibility of linking the hospital with Hyland Crest) shows there is no need for the beds, that could be, but that's highly unlikely."

Gooderham's Michael Collins said local doctors should be asked for their input since they have a knowledge of the needs and concerns of county residents.

"My understanding was there is a possibility that acute care beds would not be part of a (new Minden Hospital) facility," said Ann Woods, a HomeCare employee. Instead, the hospital's emergency and trauma role would be expanded.

"This is not what the steering committee recommended," said Doug Campbell, a Minden representative who also sat on the first committee. "I'm here to tell you this - the reaction from Minden is violently opposed to that and the demographics of the county do not support it."

Extending care

Not everyone agreed with Campbell's request to have Haliburton Extending care included in the feasibility study's terms of reference, especially since the committee has already decided to go ahead with at least 15 beds at the Haliburton Hospital.

"Extending care is a private facility. If beds are built there, should that not be the responsibility of the private owner," said Wood, adding she didn't believe it was possible to build a second storey on the building nor that the grounds were large enough. Campbell said "I have a gut feeling this government is against private enterprise being involved with making a profit on public healthcare... I just don't think we're doing our job if we ignore it."

Rotary pulls out

The Minden Rotary Club has unanimously voted to ask the province to take the $12,500 it donated to the initial Haliburton project and re-direct to a healthcare project in Minden, whatever that may be. "There is a hell of a move to protect Minden's turf," Campbell said. "The sincerity of it shocked the hell out of me."

"I'd hate to see a split like that," said Hodgson. Although it would be best to have a single committee co-ordinating healthcare, perhaps it's time to set up a committee in each of the communities. "Instead of sitting here week after week determining how to divide trinkets, we could be trying to see how can provide a better service... I don't want to be part of a fight between two villages."

Wrigley noted that instead of trying to determine where the needs are, the committee now seems intent on "trying to divide the pie between two major communities" and he's not sure that was the committee's purpose.

"In making relatively arbitrary decisions, that means you're hampering your ability to address the other concerns," said Debbie Hart-McKittrick, who is replacing Cavell now that he's been appointed as administrator of Victoria Manor in Lindsay.

In saying goodbye to the committee, Cavell said "it's really important we plan for the services for Haliburton County as a whole. How can we provide the best quality of life? How can we use funding a little bit differently to meet people's needs. Let's look at the needs and develop services to meet those needs."

Tractors and thefts hit local residents

On Thursday Aug. 20, Apsley Police were called to a neighbour dispute at L24 C6 Cardiff Twp. While standing on a property line between the John Robinson residence and the Orval Johnson residence, John Robinson was hit by a tractor that Orval Johnson had been operating. Johnson had apparently driven the machine at Robinson.

Johnson has been charged with assault and is to appear in court on Sept. 2, 1992, Minden. Robinson is a resident of Cardiff Twp. and Johnson of RR3

Bancroft.

On Aug. 22, police responded to a break and enter on Jordan Lake Rd., at Lot 28 Con 19 Cardiff Twp. The cottage was broken into and ransacked. Numerous antiques were stolen, valued at approximately $20,000. Included in the theft was: Queen Anne Desk, occasional tables, curio cabinet, Edwardian barrier chair, VCR, and Stereo equipment and computer (Apple 3E). Culprits also removed a transmission from a 1989 AMC Jeep.

On Aug. 19, Apsley O.P.P.

received a report of mischief to a motor vehicle at Lot 15 Con 12 of Cardiff Twp. Apparently a knife was used to scratch the driver's side of the vehicle, a 1985 Chev Blazer belonging to Karen Sewell of Tory Hill. The culprit(s) then slashed the front left tire.

Any information on the above incidents or any other would be appreciated. Callers not wishing to reveal their identity are reminded they can call CrimeStoppers at 1-800-461-6555 toll free.

New gun law makes things difficult

MORE LETTERS
FROM OUR READERS

To the Editor:

All firearm owners must be made aware of recent changes to regulations affecting legitimate gun owners in Canada. These regulations were quietly passed by Cabinet in mid July. Many provisions took effect on August 1, 1992. The penalty for violating these regulations is a maximum two to ten year sentence depending on the particular offence.

The storage of firearms and ammunition is now specified by law. However, what constitutes "safe storage" is very poorly defined as being in a locked container which may "not be readily broken into". Ammunition and firearms must be stored in separate locked containers. Restricted firearms must also be locked so as to make firing impossible.

The classification of firearms into groups has been expanded upon. The most severely affected are those now totally prohibited. Owners must turn in these guns and will not receive any compensation.

The second group are firearms now declared prohibited but you may retain ownership by registering the firearm and registering yourself as a 'bonafide collector'. As a bonafide collector you become subject to warrantless inspections of that portion of your home where the firearm is stored.

The third group consists of over a hundred specific firearms which are now restricted. You must forfeit or register these firearms, they may no longer be used for hunting purposes. You may transport them only under a permit obtained from the police. They may be discharge only at a government approved range.

Firearms affected by the above classifications include 22 rimfires, shotguns and centerfire rifles. The magazines for many firearms are now prohibited weapons.

These regulations should be obtained by all firearm owners. They are contained in a massive 200 page document available from your Member of Parliament.

PineStone manager plans for the future

by JILL SAWYER

Staff Reporter

IN BUSINESS TERMS, Alan Richards could be called an aggressive marketer. This season it seems that the only good business prospect would be renting out space on an ark. But Richards, the new general manager at the PineStone Resort and Conference Centre, has done a booming business selling vacations.

"No resort is going to be successful going after an exclusive market," he says. So, the PineStone's marketing team is covering all its bases by selling business conferences as well as family fun.

It hasn't been a completely trouble-free summer for Richards, who moved to Haliburton in May, because of what he calls a "cloud of uncertainty" surrounding the resort.

The PineStone closed down for the winter last year for the first time in its 16-year history. Then, last spring the resort's owners brought in Delta Hotels and Resorts to take over management. Richards says the biggest challenge was coming in from the outside, as a Delta representative, and taking care of some of the uneasiness among the staff about where the hotel was headed.

"The first six months to a year here, I'm just laying the groundwork and making plans for the future. After that, I'll be able to put the plans into process."

Last week, Delta announced that the PineStone would be staying open through the winter, so Richards has even more to plan for.

But he has 14 years of experience handling the ups and downs of the hotel business. He started his career in 1978 as a desk clerk at the Holiday Inn in London, moving up quickly to become general manager of that chain's hotel in Orillia in 1983, when he was 26 years old.

He moved around through various Holiday Inns in Ontario, and was managing the one in Barrie when Delta knocked on his door in February. Delta asked him if he'd be interested in taking over management of the PineStone.

"It intrigued me because it was a resort," he says. Although some of the hotels he's worked at have had "resort components," the PineStone is in an area almost completely dependent on tourism.

"You have to be able to offer your customers a complete package," he says, explaining that guests don't have the same entertainment options they'd have at a city hotel. "You have to spend more time looking after people on their down time."

"The PineStone already had a good reputation in the marketplace. It's positioned well for conference business, and it has one of the better golf courses in Ontario."

But in a sluggish economy, with an unseasonal cold snap due every other day, sometimes golf and business meetings aren't enough. So Richards worked hard to attract families. It was a strategy that worked well for him at Holiday Inn, a chain with a strong reputation for catering to kids.

"Families with kids can't usually afford to take two weeks' vacation, but they can afford to get away for three or four days."

Richards and his staff invented the "Fun Zone," a supervised program for kids that runs all day. Kids get lunch and dinner, movies, cartoons, pool parties, nature walks, time on the jungle gym, and a series of other organized activities. Parents get a vacation.

"We've had excellent feedback from parents. It's worked very well, and we want to expand it next year."

Richards will spend the next year working on what he calls "curb appeal": the impression guests get when they first arrive. It will include some new paint, a lobby renovation, and some new signs. "The golf course is an ongoing project, not only maintenance but keeping it competitive with other courses."

But how do you sell a hotel that's made its name on a fine golf course, and its proximity to one of the most beautiful lake districts in the province, in the dead of winter?

How about snow golf? Richards laughs when he says it. "You get this really huge ball...it's just an idea."

He has a backup plan that includes cross-country ski and snowmobile trails, an ice rink, and possible golf clinics. He also plans to start a cross-promotion campaign with Sir Sam's ski area, offering downhill ski packages to tourists and locals.

"With the chalets and villas and fireplaces here, this place is ideal for winter."

The PineStone has a new sales office in Toronto, and access to Delta's national sales team, one of the perks of being associated with a large chain. Guests at the Delta Chelsea Hotel in Toronto found a pamphlet about the PineStone on their pillows in July.

"The first six months to a year here, I'm just laying the groundwork and making plans for the future," says Alan Richards, the PineStone's new general manager.

The challenge now is to market the resort's winter program. The hotel will only be open to the public on the weekends, and be available to large groups during the week. "It doesn't necessarily have to be for a convention. We'll take large groups of skiers, or school groups."

Richards doesn't foresee much of a problem with the reduced hours faced by his staff during the winter. The PineStone is the area's largest private employer.

"Most of our staff are seasonal, so they'll be going back to school. That doesn't leave us with a lot of people." The remaining staff members will be offered three or four full-time workdays per week, and Richards says that the remaining time will be paid for with unemployment insurance.

"I don't think it should be a problem to qualify for this. We would administer the program and do all the paperwork."

Richards has also suggested that some of the staff will be able to transfer to jobs outside Haliburton, at one of Delta's other hotels across Canada.

So far, Richards and his staff have seen their marketing strategy pay off. Room rates were lowered slightly this season, and the number of guests has increased. Carrying the momentum of the summer into the fall and winter will be challenging, but it's something that Richards is obviously ready for.

Besides, there are probably a lot of snow golf fanatics out there in need of a vacation.

Environment needs to be addressed

by NANCY KUZMICH

Staff Reporter

The following are brief reports of items discussed at last Tuesday's meeting of Glamorgan council.

Environment

Sandra Jenkinson, the county's environmental youth corp representative, says a package has been developed to "give ideas and assistance in an area where all municipalities are having problems."

The kit is divided into six areas with the first being waste diversion, which includes ways to utilize the 3 "Rs": reduce, re-use, recycle. The second aspect is composting "wet" garbage which accounts for 30 percent of landfill waste. The third item is called full cost accounting and looks at ways of financing future landfill sites.

"Waste management has now become a business and it's urgent to start treating it like one."

A proposed material resource centre is the fourth idea. This pioneering concept would see landfill sites also used as second-hand stores. One is already established in Halton Hills and the package tells how to get one going, receive funding and generate a small income.

The fifth aspect addresses landfill attendant training and the final one is public education which Jenkinson describes as "usually the hardest thing."

Jenkinson can help by offering municipalities a list of contacts and funding sources to get started and a list of available material is at the county office.

Tamarack relieve

"Basically, all I'm trying to do tonight is re-approach council," is how Tamarack Lake property owners' spokesperson Darlene Sharp began. Although council nixed the possibility of declaring the lake a no-motors waterway earlier this summer, Sharp begged them to reconsider.

Every property owner has agreed to no motors when they signed their deeds. The problem is trespassers to the lake. Since the OPP will be responsible for policing the lake, the only cost and is the posting and maintenance of signs. Council does not want to shoulder that responsibility and Sharp said she would. Two other families present at the meeting also said they were willing to be responsible for the signs and Sharp was given the go-ahead from council to consult a lawyer regarding a formal agreement between council and the ratepayers (in absence of a formal ratepayers' association).

Sharp is to bring the agreement to council's next meeting, September 2nd where it can be evaluated and Reeve Bev MacDuff is optimistic a decision can be reached by the September 15th meeting.

"I don't personally see any problem with it but it's still going to be a long process... two years."

The delay will occur while various branches of government deliberate over the agreement before deciding to pass it.

Rabies clinic

Glamorgan will hold a rabies vaccination clinic, tentatively scheduled for October 3rd.

Minden's arena lawsuit thrown out

Minden's lawsuit against the builders and architect of the Minden arena has been dismissed after a judge determined council's estimate of damage to the building was "excessive and unreasonable."

In her August 13th ruling, Madame Justice Janet Boland ordered that the action against Norman Burling Builders Ltd., and Ronald H. Harrison & Associates Ltd., be dropped. She also ruled that the municipality must pay all legal fees incurred by the defendants as a result of the case.

The ruling comes almost four years after the municipality launched the lawsuit against Norman Burling Builders Ltd., and Ronald Harrison, accusing them of using illegal building practices during construction of the Minden arena back in 1972. Council was seeking damages in the amount of $250,000.

The suit came about after the township hired civil engineer Robert McEwen in 1985 to inspect the premises. He found the building to be structurally sound, but was concerned with the amount of corrosion on steel reinforcements. After several inspections from 1985 to 1987, McEwen discovered the corrosion was severe and he suspected that chloride contamination of the mortar in the masonry block walls was at fault.

Samples of the mortar were sent to a lab and it was discovered they contained more chloride than is permitted by industry standards. McEwen concluded that the builders had added chloride salts to the mortar to prevent it from freezing.

Repairs were finally done to the building in 1990 at a cost of $245,000.

In her judgment, Justice Boland accused council of undertaking unnecessary and costly repairs. She added that while it is reasonable to assume that the corrosion of steel was caused by the concentration of chloride in the mortar blocks, it is also reasonable to assume the situation was exacerbated by poor maintenance and ventilation of the building.

Council has already spent over $62,000 in legal fees in pursuing the case. In a vote, council agreed to not comment on or release any details of the case or judgment. A simple one sentence press release was distributed indicating the case was dismissed.

A CAREFUL PRESCRIPTION

CHANGES TO THE ONTARIO DRUG BENEFIT PROGRAM

The Ministry of Health is changing the Ontario Drug Benefit program, effective August 25.

The ministry asked an independent group of health experts to recommend changes to the program. As a result, some new drugs are being added, and others are being taken off.

Prescription drugs necessary for serious health conditions will continue to be available, at no direct cost, to those on the program. As well, over-the-counter products such as insulin for diabetes are still covered.

Among the products being added to the program are a new slow release drug to treat Parkinson's disease, and a drug for the treatment of shingles. Products like sunscreens, multiple vitamins and antihistamines are among those being removed.

In total, the changes affect a small percentage of drugs covered by the program.

WHY MAKE THE CHANGES?

The government is working to better manage health care spending. It now spends over $1 billion a year on the Ontario Drug Benefit program alone.

Costs have risen 18 per cent annually during the past 10 years. With these changes we hope to keep the increase to 14 per cent.

MORE INFORMATION?

The Ontario Drug Benefit program provides benefits to people 65 and over, and people receiving social assistance.

For more information on how these changes may affect you, call the ministry's toll-free Infoline.

THIS WEEK

Laumann credits inner strength for win

ly always used to stop for ice cream in those long ago halcyon summers. Wallace still remembers the treat and mentioned it on this visit.)

Next stop was the Family Medical Centre to fulfill a promise the Barclays had made to their doctor, Robert Heyes, who has been following the two rowers' careers with avid interest. Patients in the lobby certainly didn't mind the wait as everyone gathered 'round the two examples of prime health and fitness.

And then the older couple thought they'd better take their sought-after guests by the newspaper office.

"Hello, we've got a couple of celebrities here" was all accountant Debbie Bates heard. She was manning the reception desk and was the only person in the office. After seating the visitors, she kept a steady barrage of small talk going with the hopes a reporter would soon show up.

When one did, it was immediately following an interview with Al Morrow, who just happens to be the head coach of the three Olympic gold-medal winning women's rowing teams. He was vacationing at the family's Hall Lake cottage and as the "Echo" van pulled into the office's parking lot, Bates stuck her head out to announce someone was waiting.

The four graciously allowed time for a quick interview although it was apparent that they were in a hurry to cram in as much of Haliburton as they could in one day.

After expressing surprise over Morrow's presence in the Highlands, Laumann explained that she chose to train out west with the national men's coach Mike Sprackles because of his experience in sculling.

"I needed it and he was a good, positive change."

She started rowing 10 years ago, at the age of 17 in Mississauga at the Don Rowing Club. "I just fell into it." Her sister took her along with her one day and Laumann loved it. She's been to three Olympics, winning

Summer Olympics

"I'm very strong minded and very determined. I think I have a talent for focusing in on what I want and using my energy to get it!"

a bronze medal with sister Danielle in Los Angeles in 1984 and placing seventh in the doubles at Seoul's 1988 games.

But the highlight of her career has been her amazing return to competition after a boat cut into the side of her calf on May 15, a scant 12 weeks before the Olympics began. But the determined athlete gave it her all.

"My expectations changed every game. I went to the Olympics with the goal of having a great experience. I went into the final with the intention of winning if I could."

And would she have taken the gold, if not for her injury?

"It's difficult to predict the future and I certainly wouldn't want to take that away from the winner. (At the Olympics) the fragility of success is present around you all the time."

"Winning isn't everything. It's the pursuit of excellence. I was a symbol of someone who did that," she adds as an explanation of why she was the international media darling in Barcelona. "I liked the way the Canadian press focused on those human challenges and efforts. The foremost focus was on people who overcame obstacles."

When asked what makes her tick, where this drive for doing your very best comes from, Laumann is at a loss to pinpoint any influence.

"I'm very strong-minded and very determined. I'm an incredibly focused person. I think I have a talent for focusing in on what I want and using my energy to get it and that's what I had to do this year. Most people didn't think it was possible."

She doesn't know where that characteristic comes from but she's always had it. Her family has always given her lots of support but never pushed her and Laumann says it's impossible for her to credit any one person with her unusual drive.

But she does say family, and friends made this year's Olympic victory a sweet one.

"We did well. We had an incredible amount of supporters there." Her father, stepmother, sister and brother-in-law were all in the stands to witness her third-place finish.

"It was wonderful to win that way because you immediately were there with the people you loved and cared about."

Wallace's win was also shared with those most important to him. After placing sixth in Seoul ("it was a bit of a disappointment"), the first place spot in Barcelona seemed hard to grasp.

"It took a while for it to sink in. My parents had come over and that made it more enjoyable and emotional."

When Wallace's team crossed the finish line, he "heard a big scream from the stern of the boat" which gave him his first inkling they might be the champs. He was so exhausted he couldn't even put his arms up to signal victory. But then he started waving at his parents who came up to give him a hug and shed some proud tears.

"I was a little teary-eyed myself."

He wasn't too surprised, however, since his team had twice taken home the silver medal from the 1990 and 1991 world championships. "We've been knocking on the door the last couple of years."

Although Olympic competition isn't any more challenging than the world championships, Wallace and Laumann concede that winning a medal at the former is more of a highlight. "It's just such a special event."

They praise organizers for such a well-run, friendly event. When they weren't training, they visited the surrounding area and got reacquainted with athletes they had met at other events. A Russian rower whom Wallace had met at the 1991 World Cup in Vienna arrived in Barcelona with a beautifully carved wooden egg for his Canadian friend. And one night they had dinner with the two German rowers who had crashed into Laumann's boat. One of them still wouldn't look at Laumann so guilty did he still feel, but she quickly tried to put him at ease.

"It's really nice to see a young couple be this way," says Mrs. Barclay, describing the two as being very modest and nice. Visits to the Highlands "have been quite a family affair and now Silken has come along and she's just such a wonderful person."

Atlanta, 1993 is still uncharted territory for Laumann (Wallace says she's going, she says "maybe"). But Wallace knows he's seen his last Olympics. Now 30, the Burlington native didn't begin rowing until his university years at Western. After spending time with the Leander Boat Club in Hamilton, he progressed to the national team in 1985. Although he now has his grandparents' cottage in Wilberforce to use as a Highlands base, he grew up cottaging on Koshlong and Kashagawigamog Lakes. His grandmother says that he first learned how to paddle and row during those early summers. His grandfather wouldn't let them into the boat until they could swim to a rock and back. Once they could, grandfather gave them boating privileges and a dollar bill.

Describing his life as "one-dimensional" so far - "rowing is our career" - he's now thinking of getting into sports marketing. Meanwhile, his busy girlfriend continues to mull over product endorsement offers that are starting to pour in and letter of congratulations, among them ones from Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and federal NDP leader Audrey McLaughlin. Laumann, whose father has a cottage on the Green Lake side of Grass Lake near West Guilford, would like to eventually get into broadcasting, not necessarily sports, but she's willing to start there. She's kept busy with numerous public speaking engagements at which she advocates personal goal setting.

Unfortunately, by this time, this reporter's goal of keeping them at "The Echo" as long as possible was fizzling out. There are too many questions and too little time. After glancing at her watch, Laumann announces they must be on their way. The Barclays, who refer to her as their granddaughter, want to show the B.C. visitors some more Haliburton sights, just like any local residents showing off the county to their visiting company.

After posing for pictures, where Wallace and Laumann insist the grandparents wear the medals, they stop to chat to passersby who have recognized them and then they're in the car and gone.

And "The Echo" skeleton staff smugly sat back and waited for the return of their co-workers because, boy, did we have a story for them...

PERHAPS MY IMPRESSIONS were influenced by the book I had read the previous evening. Howards End, by E.M. Forster, is partly about our relationship to houses, and what makes our souls connect with what is, after all, the often indiscriminate placing of stone, timber, brick and garden.

"She approached just as Helen's letter had described her, trailing noiselessly over the lawn, and there was actually a wisp of hay in her hands. She seemed to belong not to the young people and their motor, but to the house, and to the tree that overshadowed it."

This is how we first meet Mrs. Wilcox, owner of an English country home named Howards End. (Why don't we ever name our houses?) A few chapters later, Mrs. Wilcox has died and sent her family into a tither by leaving Howards End to a young woman she's known for only a short time. "To them Howards End was a house: they could not know that to her it had been a spirit, for which she sought a spiritual heir."

What type of place is this Howards End? Had I ever been in a house where I felt such a strong bond of attachment? Why does familiarity rarely breed contempt when it comes to the warm comfort of home?

But it wasn't just imagination which made me feel I was entering somewhere special when I turned right at the Dahl sign. Here, and just before the turn, the road took me through several abandoned homesteads. The simple, wooden houses stood lonely in the fields, like large tombstones for a previous age. The curtainless windows, surrounding silence and abandoned gateways read like an inscription: "Here lies the beginning of the family. Lovingly remembered but sadly forsaken by the generations which have since moved closer to town, to jobs in the city, across the country..."

From these buildings children once ran, fathers emerged for a long day tilling the rocks from the land, and mothers struggled out with a huge basket of Monday washing. The buildings were a place of love, laughter, arguments, scolding, togetherness. Now they just seemed quaint and picturesque.

I stopped at the Dahl driveway. On the right was a sign introducing the "Dahl Forest Farms". More than 120,000 trees have been planted here, and the sign lists the species and their number: 18,000 white pines, 41,100 red pines, 26,000 white spruce and 7,600 European larch. What looks like it has always been here is actually "man made" or man inspired.

On the left is an apple tree, raspberry bushes not far away. Why would they make me, who has never lived in the country, feel that incredible sense of yearning for some past happiness?

Is the primordial Canadian a Highlands farmer? As I continued along the wooded path, I could only surmise that those summers at the cottage meant more to me than I realized. It was an outdoor life of forests, lakes, and endless forts "built" in the clearings. Mrs. Deitman's store was about two or three miles away, and every day we children would walk down wooded roads, past the fields of blackberries and houses almost hidden from view, just to get a quarter's worth of candy. "When I was a child, we had to walk three miles to the candy store," I'll tell my grandchildren.

Forest, sweet forest

Life on "The Farm" is idyllic at best, and nurturing at rest.

*Thirty-five years after helping to plant
120,000 trees, Peggy
Dahl still loves to stop and admire the young moss.*

Nature is allowed in through the large picture windows facing the Burnt River. In the lower right corner of the window, you can see the bridge suspended over the gently flowing water.

A few minutes of twists and turns later, we arrive. A large white dog comes bounding towards the truck, barking to beat the band. In the seconds before the door of the Alpine chalet opens, your eyes take in the beckoning tree fort, the swing bridge crossing the river in the valley below you, the sense of nourishing solitude.

Peggy Dahl steps out, hushes the dog and welcomes me in. This isn't an interview, it's a visit. Inside, the stereo provides us with a free violin and piano concert. This music, which was likely written for European royalty two centuries ago, melds in perfectly with the expansive view of a green forest cut in two by the Burnt River. Unlike most music today, the classical duet is beautiful for the sake of beauty. And no matter what you're told of evolution and survival of the fittest, the harmony of trees, water and valley is beautiful for the sake of beauty. The music and the landscape are worlds apart but they come together as if they were always meant to be. "It's a lovely, lovely spot," agrees Mrs. Dahl, who was once a professional violinist, as she pours the coffee. "Any time I've been away from Canada or Ontario, when I think of home, this is where I think of. It's just that kind of feeling."

"It has so many memories and everything is familiar. But it's not just the house, it's the whole environment. It's just a part of me. I'd be lost without it."

Has she ever read Howards End?

The chalet uses large picture windows to provide the decorative effects. The living room and eating area fall under the large cathedral ceiling and face the Burnt River. Off to the side of the entrance — where an easel stands ready for grandson Paddy's next visit — is a large new screened-in porch. Nothing separates you from the outdoors except a thin layer of wire mesh. Nature is allowed in, but the mosquitoes and deer flies are kept outside of biting distance.

Unfortunately, it's a little too chilly to sit in the porch so we once again move into the central chalet. Mrs. Dahl hands me a sheet of paper with a history of what she calls "The Farm" but which her son Peter now calls the "Dahl Forest."

Peter writes: "The Dahl Forest property was originally composed of several worn-out farms purchased in parts by [my father] William Dahl in the mid 1950s. It consists of about 500 acres of glacial river valley and rock highlands almost evenly divided by the Burnt River. To the east and south it borders thousands of acres of wilderness.

"When it was purchased, the land was in deplorable condition. The farm fields on the river lowlands were almost devoid of topsoil, eroded and overgrazed by cattle. Large areas of exposed sand, gravel and rock baked lifelessly in the sun. On the more rugged and hilly parts almost every tree of any size had been cut for lumber or firewood. Cattle wearing bells rambled freely over the area, scavenging what they could from the rocky ground.

"The fall deer hunt was atrocious. Packs of hounds were run from the Gelert area on the east side of the river, following the high ground and herding the deer along to a point where as many as 100 hunters waited. At times the shooting resembled warfare.

"William Dahl, a Swedish immigrant and far-sighted businessman, lived in Lindsay at the time and decided to attempt a restoration of the land. He took it upon himself to remove the old fences, purchase the necessary machinery, hire help and reforest the property. In the late '50s he planted over 100,000 trees [with the help of his wife and two children] on about 200 acres of forest fields. He persuaded local farmers to keep cattle away and as much as possible, discouraged hunting. In 1978 the property was placed under a Woodlands Improvement Act agreement with the Ministry of Natural Resources and some additional planting was carried out in the 1980s. The remainder of the property has been left untouched to regenerate naturally.

"Today Dahl Forest is a splendid wilderness conservation area. Former gravel pits are needle-carpeted pine groves, the once bare, rocky hills are cloaked in mixed-bush forest, wetlands and streams have become established where cattle once slogged through the mud. A rich variety of bird and animal wildlife has returned to thrive in the forest environment. Virtually every species native to the Haliburton area has been sighted and is welcome to live undisturbed."

Little wonder that Peter and Peggy Dahl were instrumental in setting up the Haliburton Field Naturalist club last spring. They are ardent naturalists, believing that we live with nature in partnership, not in domination or fear. Imagine all those Easter weekends spent bent over the ground, planting 100,000 seedlings. Other people would have simply bought a forest. They wanted to create one, to help restore nature. These fields weren't meant for farms and settlers. They were meant to grow trees.

Accompanying the history of The Farm is a map. Mrs. Dahl, the dog Kimik (the Inuit word for dog) and I go for a walk down Big Bend Trail, past Turtle Bluff and turn right onto Jack Pine Trail, which takes us back to the chalet, a circle of about one and a half

Building Better Citizens Since 1862

The Royal Canadian Army Cadets, Canada's oldest youth organization, with almost 25,000 Cadets in some 300 communities from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland, has been serving Canadian youth since 1862, five years before Confederation.

The Army Cadet movement is supervised jointly by The Army Cadet League and the Department of National Defence, and is sponsored locally by a variety of community organizations such as school boards, service clubs, and by branches of the Royal Canadian Legion.

During the school year, Cadets usually meet once a week at a local community centre or armory to learn first aid, marching, map and compass using, campcraft, field-cooking skills, leadership, public speaking and other aspects of good citizenship. Competitive and recreational activities include canoeing, cross-country skiing, team sports and target shooting. Weekends often find Army Cadets practising their outdoor skills in conservation areas or in military training areas.

During the summer, almost 9,000 Army Cadets attend some dozen camps and exchanges in Canada and overseas. Cadets can attend basic training, rifle shooting, wilderness and athletic leadership courses in or near their own province or territory. More qualified Cadets learn mountaineering at the National Army Cadet Camp at Banff and parachuting at the Canadian Forces Airborne Training Centre, Edmonton.

There is no charge for Army Cadet training and although Cadets are not members of the Canadian Forces, their uniforms and equipment are provided free by the Department of National Defence. Cadets attending a six-week camp receive a $240 training bonus and many senior Cadets are hired and paid as assistant instructors at summer camps. Selected senior Cadets can attend international exchanges to the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. Marksmen can qualify for the international rifle shooting matches at Bisley, England.

Of all the benefits of the Army Cadet experience, perhaps none is so valuable in adult life as training in the art of leadership. The great opportunity to manage a group of ten or thirty or sixty other persons is given to relatively few young people. Those who do it successfully are very well prepared for positions of responsibility in their future careers. Even those who do not become leaders can gain a sense of self-worth by learning that they can make a valuable contribution to their group and that by working together they can overcome many seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

Young men and women who are physically fit and of good character, and are at least 12 but not yet 18, are eligible to join an Army Cadet Corps subject to the discretion of the Commanding Officer.

Meandering ways lead to a forest with unique personality kilometres. At Turtle Bluff there's a spartan campfire, with a pile of forked twigs waiting for a winter lunch of hot dogs.

Mrs. Dahl's love of nature shines through. She stops to marvel at the moss which now covers the ground - "I wish I knew more about mosses" - and explains that red pines have two needles sprouting from the stem, a white pine has five. In my mind I say "five needles, five letters in white, five needles, five letters in white..."

"I think we planted the trees a little too close together," she observes. The MNR agrees, and has marked with yellow paint those trees which should be cut to provide more growing space for the other trees. The red pine grow up straight and tall - almost too straight and too tall. The trees have pruned themselves by dropping off the lower branches so the nourishment can feed the top of the tree struggling to find the sun among the dense canopy of needles. There's not enough light to sustain much underbrush.

Unless you stop to look, this doesn't seem like a man-made forest. William and Peggy Dahl, their children Peter and Nana, couldn't always keep a straight line and the rows of trees often meander. A little to the right here, oops, back to the centre, back to the right, let me walk straight towards that rock... Thank goodness for imperfection. The Dahl Forest is not as sterile as those ministry forests which are little more than tree farms for cultivation.

When Mrs. Dahl talks of the trees, her voice is full of friendship and admiration. Although this is very much a family oasis, she is often here alone and yet she's rarely lonely. It's as if she's always among friends.

Her mind is as busy as her person. Later in the afternoon there's a basket of raspberries to be made into jam. By the window are several books on nature. On one of her previous walks, she picked a flower she was unfamiliar with, brought it home and looked up its description in one of her flower guides. The Common Yellow Primrose now lies pressed between the pages.

She's also quick to pick up her bird book when a strange visitor arrives at the birdhouse. She can't settle for ignorance; she has to know who and what make up the world around her. In person she's a bit like a bird herself: small and diminutive, her voice, virtually chirps, with enthusiasm.

"My father used to take us out birdwatching," she says. "When I was growing up we spent our summers at Southampton. We hardly had shoes on all summer. We used to often go to the beach and cook on a fire."

Just as she is a few years ahead of many Highlanders when it comes to conserving and respecting nature, her parents were quite progressive when it came to raising two daughters. Both American, her parents met at Oberlin College in Ohio, where her mother studied music. "We used to go to bed at night listening to her play Schumann and Schubert on the piano," remembers Mrs. Dahl. "My mother was very up and coming. She was partly instrumental in starting a music club in Guelph and the YWCA there."

At 10, young Peggy Hinman started studying the violin; her sister already played the piano. Music was something the family always did together. "It was kind of an old-fashioned

'It's not just the house, it's the whole environment. It's just a part of me. I'd be lost without it,' says Peggy Dahl, who is Kimik's favourite walking partner.

upbringing," says Mrs. Dahl, who was born in 1918.

She went on to study the violin at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto, and for a while played in orchestras and summer symphonies. After she married, "I gave it up. I decided I couldn't do everything. That's always been my trouble - I'm interested in too many things."

This year she's in charge of advertising for the Haliburton County Concert Series. There are also the meetings of the Field Naturalists, and travel. Her daughter lives in Alberta, her sister cottages in Quebec, and there's an entire world to be discovered. She's even been known to go on overnight canoe trips with her son, daughter-in-law Jan McClellan and grandson (who spent last week, brrrrr, paddling through Temegami.)

Unfortunately, this visit must come to an end. A heavy dose of reality awaits me at the county council meeting in Minden. But I try not to think of that as I make my way down the road with a new appreciation of the forest which surrounds me. I stop at an abandoned barn, only the stone walls left, to take pictures of the valley. I think of the Dahls who are honouring the past by making the land fertile once again. And I am full of new energies and optimism about the future. Having just left a house which was a home, my thoughts turn inward as I try to put words to feelings.

What a wonderful way to spend a morning.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Reunion is a success

D. Crauley

On Saturday, August 8th a very delightful party was held at the West Guilford Community Centre. It was a reunion for the Cowan/Cowan clan.

John, Jim, Bill, Tom and Annie Cowan were pioneers in this county. All but Annie, who moved out west, lived, worked and died here.

John married Edna Stevens. They had seven sons: Royce, George, Harry, Bob, Ted, Eric and Lloyd, and five daughters: Muriel, Carrie, Ruby, Ruth and Phyllis. All of the daughters and four of the sons survive and with their spouses and offspring numbered 55.

Jim married Gladys Cook and bore six sons: Fred, Bill, Bert, Russell, Alvin and Max and four daughters: Ethel, Doris, Ada and Violet. All survive and at the party their number was 67.

Jim married Gladys Cook and bore six sons: Fred, Bill, Bert, Russell, Alvin and Max and four daughters: Ethel, Doris, Ada and Violet. All survive and at the party their number was 67.

Regretfully, no member of Tom's family attended.

The distinction of being the oldest person there went to Muriel Hewitt who was 86 years young late April. The youngest person present was Travis James McKenna who said hello to the world just fourteen days previous.

A Cowan reunion, of course, had to have food and it was there in abundance. Everyone contributed, pot luck style, and, after the blessing was said, most of this delicious food vanished.

Guests were present from Brampton, Bowmanville, Oshawa, Port Perry, Peterborough, Sarnia, Hamilton, Thessalon, Sault Ste. Marie, Penetanguishene, and Toronto. Garnet and Violet Coulter came the farthest - all the way from Campbell River, British Columbia.

The reunion was organized by Doris and Jim Cooper and was such a success that it is planned to make it an annual affair. As Jim said in a poem that he composed especially for the occasion, "We're getting older and time is dear."

THE COWEN FAMILY RE-UNION 1992

The Cowen Family's friends, now a great crew. When they assemble, you have quite a few. There was Thom and Jack, and Jim and Bill. They all lived up, on a hill.

Sister Annie, was liked the best, When she married, she moved out West. Their farms would yield, an annual crop. And then there was the wood to chop.

soon many children, would arrive, But to-day, not all survive. Through the depression, they brought this brood, On the table, always good food.

The work was hard, the hours long, they did not shirk, the will was strong. Those sons and daughters, they gave away, That is why, we are here to-day.

Great & Grandchildren, by the score, Each passing year, there are more. Living now in, many places, You know them, by their Cowen faces.

With their many talents, more to share, It seems there is no time to spare. We must Unite now, once a year, We're getting older, time is dear.

They had 'Faithful Partners,' those original 'Five'. Now we wish, they were all alive. To pay them tribute, this hardy lot, Where they are resting, a hallowed spot.

Don't get too close to landfill site bears

DORSET NEWS

by Phyllis Briscoe

Belated birthday wishes to Marion Tyson who celebrated on Aug. 17. Best wishes to Mary Howard who had her big day on Aug. 20th. Happy birthday to Robert Hammond who was 16 on Aug. 23rd.

I am told that the bears are congregating in large numbers at the landfill sites especially in early evening. Authorities have warned the public not to get close to a bear as they will sometimes attack humans. This has happened several times in the last few years, being fatal to those attacked. So if you go to the sites to have a look at a bear be sure and stay in your car and don't do anything to tempt their appetite.

We are hoping that summer comes before fall arrives. Tuesday, Aug. 11th was a beautiful sunny day and I was fortunate to be invited for a drive to Raymond, where we had been invited to have lunch at Oasis House by the lovely owner-hostesses, Dr. Sally Saunders and Sharon Poole. After enjoying a delicious lunch we had a lovely drive home on the scenic road through Rosseau, cutting in to Hekla, the original Icelandic settlement, stopped to admire some herons' nests that Ann had spotted earlier, but by this time they had left their nests. A leisurely drive home after a very enjoyable day.

The lucky winner of the Lion's $100 monthly draw for August was Colin Winterbottom. We congratulate him. This draw is being discontinued as the Lions have altered their program for the coming year. Lions Bingo will be continued until the end of August, each Thursday evening at 8 p.m.

Irene Minaker and Dorothy McCallum paid a surprise visit when they dropped in for lunch one day last week.

The annual canoe race from Baysville to Dorset was held on Saturday, July 8 and in spite of the rain there were 37 participants.

Adopt-a-highway leaves clean image

by MORRIS DUFF

Special to The Echo

ADOPT-A-HIGHWAY. Signs carrying that appeal dotted the sides of highways as soon as we crossed into the U.S. at buffalo. At the bottom of each was the name of the organization, perhaps the local Rotary Club or the employees at a store, who had adopted that piece of road.

"What does it mean?" I asked, as we drove across Pennsylvania and Ohio into Indiana.

"I think that it has something to do with littering," my wife, Shirley reasoned. By then we were in Illinois.

She was correct. Adopt-a-Highway is a program that has spread from state to state, in which people volunteer to pick up other people's droppings along a two mile section of highway. That is really four miles, as they do both sides. (I wasn't able to find out where the program began.)

"It's nice to keep the place where we live clean," explained Don Provencher, an environmental technician at the Boise Cascade pulp, paper and cardboard box mill south of Burbank, Wash. He is one of 13 employees who has spent at least one Saturday picking litter from the highway in front of the plant. They are not paid.

Adopt-a-Highway did not spread to Washington until 1989. Many areas do not have volunteers yet and the mess beside those roads is obvious, even to a motorist driving 100 k.p.h.

Washington decided to try Adopt-a-Highway after a legislator saw it in a neighboring state.

"I thought it was rather dumb and expected to get little response," commented a highways official in Yakima, Wash., recalling when he had been ordered to institute the program in his area a year ago. "But it has just taken off."

To his surprise, with little advertising, he got 36 volunteer groups. All go out regularly.

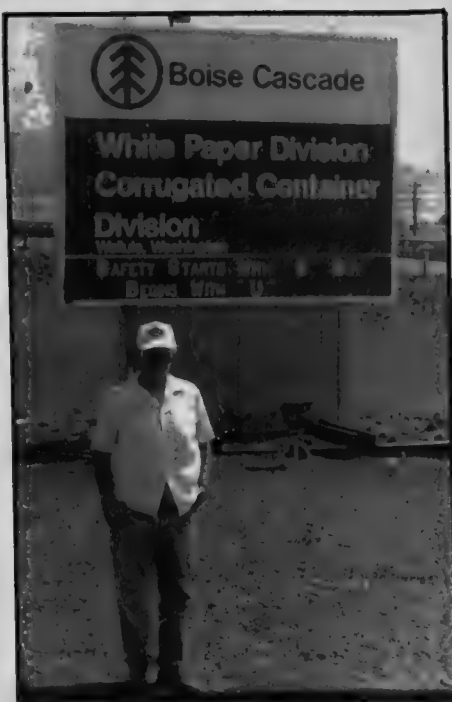

He expected a big drop out rate because picking garbage is hard work. Only one group has dropped out. All members were elderly women. They tried hard for several months, but found it was beyond their physical ability.

Employees at Boise Cascade volunteered after Phyllis Suksdorf, known as Mom to her fellow employees and a leader of the plant's beautification committee, saw Adopt-a-Highway in operation in Montana. She suggested it to the committee and they agreed.

"The public sees all industry in a negative way," Ms. Suksdorf commented during an interview. "This shows... that employees are concerned in doing something to help the environment."

Their agreement with the state is to pick up the litter at least six times a year. So far, they have gone twice.

On the first, in March, they filled 150 garbage bags. The second, a month later, saw the amount drop in half.

Employees at Boise Cascade must clean highway six times a year

On the first pick up, they collected the hood of a car and a bunch of dirty cloth diapers. They also spotted one hypodermic needle, which they tagged and left for a professional. The most frequent litter is beer cans and disposable diapers.

"I volunteered because I thought it was the right thing to do," explained Dianne Turner, a paper inspector. "People care when we make it look nice."

"Doing this is a good idea," said Glen Paradis, a maintenance planner. "We picked up stuff that has been there for years."

All said that they no longer litter. Nor do they allow others in their cars to do so. Picking up garbage gives a real insight, is educational.

"And... we do have a good time," interjected Marilyn Ransom, a human resource specialist. They have coffee, doughnuts, a picnic, and companionship.

They do a better job than paid employees, a highways official in Pasco, Wash. commented. What's more, they do it all year. In addition, it's designed to save the state money.

"Why don't you have Adopt-a-Highway in Canada?" one of the Boise Cascade employees asked me.

"It sounds like a good idea," I replied. "We just hadn't heard about it."

We have now. When we were driving from Thunder Bay through to Sault Ste. Marie, we found the idea had spread north of the border. What do you think Dennis Drainville? You are our provincial member and I suggest this would be a good private members bill, one that would pass.

If you act, we can follow.

Lights were on for a night of fine baseball

WEST GUILFORD ELEANOR COOPER

Heather Harrington and Laurel Yateman organized a wonderful fiftieth anniversary celebration for their parents, Ted and Carol Duncan on Aug. 15, 1992 at the Centre. Guests from Calgary, Heather's home, were Don Tchida, Margaret and Fred Farsch, and Elsie and Ralph Cribb, on holiday at the Duncan's for 2 weeks. Other special guests from out of town included Peggy and Ken Whitney of Wainfleet, their daughter, Bev and husband Larry of Port Colborne and Bev's daughter Rebecca.

Murray and Dorothy Hadlow of Mississauga, Gladys Losce (Traux) of Gravenhurst, Mel Jackson and Margaret Lewis, Wes and Mary Jackson of Samia were all able to join the happy couple. Other guests deserving special mention are Ted's aunt, Reita McNeil who lives near the Bethel Church, Ted's brother, Bill and sisters Edna Louke and husband Milton, Reita Hughes, Maizie Mintz, Jessie Roberts (who had been bridesmaid), and Rhoda and her husband Ed McKelvey. After the delicious dinner entertainment was provided in a humorous enactment of a mock wedding, starring Laurel's children: Skye, representing the bride, and wearing Carol's own bridal gown and veil; Troy, the hesitant groom, and Paige, the flower girl. Murray Hadlow provided the services of dubious minister! The dance that followed drew still more friends and relatives from the community to complete the Golden Anniversary for the Duncans. Congratulations from us all!

Helen and Bernard Jubb report their family company over a three-week holiday in the persons of their daughter and son-in-law and family from Edmonton. Bernice Jubb, Wayne Williams, Ryan and Sarah all enjoyed their time on Grass Lake with parents and grandparents.

A visit as delightful as it was unexpected occasioned a spontaneous reunion on August 18 at Elva Cooper's when Ralph Bice, his sister, Bessie and her husband Frank Mason and Ralph's two daughters, Phyllis and Marilyn with their husbands, Ross and Rod, all of Kearney called on us. In the accompanying van were more relatives: Jim and Joan (Boice) Lott of Tottenham, Shirla (Bice) Richardson of Shinnston, W. Va., and Ed and Martha Nugum, of Bridgeport W. Virginia. Jan (Sawyer) Illywka was contacted and came to visit also, Sid and Ian Cooper, and from the Irish Line, Don and Helen Campbell who had known Ralph from Don's parents' association in hunting with him a generation ago. All the folks brought out their picnic lunch and enjoyed it on the lawn. Elva and Ralph challenged each other to a race around the house with their walkers, but somehow that didn't materialize! The company then went on to visit Petra Pequegnat at Extedicare, and Rex and Grace Boice at Redstone.

Company at Gilkinson's lately for Al and Marge included their son Donald and a friend from Ottawa, Donald's children Anne and Dana and grandson David.

Orval and Colleen Morrison have just returned from a two and a half week motor trip to B.C. They enjoyed the view en route of fields of mustard, maize, and canola on the prairies — oh and sunflower fields as well. Crow's Nest Pass was navigated successfully, (I take off my hat to that venture!) and their destinations were Abbotsford, B.C. where they visited Colleen's uncle, Fred Miller and his wife Laura, and Elder Grove, B.C.

where a cousin, Forest Telford operates a dairy farm.

Lottie Ruttan's company during the summer included her brother Vern and his wife Heather with their son Ralph from Newmarket, who also visited Lottie's sister, Lila Gray. Other places and people were Agnes Reid from Toronto, Shirley Geiche from Unionville, both long-time friends, and Alvin, Bonnie and Irene from St. Catharines.

Did you notice? Lights were on at the Centre for night-time baseball, thanks to efforts of the committee which works year-round to accommodate us and make the West Guilford Centre accessible to us many for so many events, thanks from the community and surrounding areas.

BROHM GRADUATION: Gina Brohm, daughter of Jack and Lynda, graduated May 30th from Wilfrid Laurier University on the Dean's List with an Honours Bachelor of Arts Degree in Sociology. She will be attending York University for a Bachelor of Education Degree in September.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Highland Grove centre ready to become active

WILBERFORCE
FLO ELLIOTT

On Monday evening August 17th, a meeting was held at the Cardiff Council Chambers to discuss the future of the recreation building (the old school) in Highland Grove. This building houses the Library and also the card parties and, occasionally, dinners are held here. It is very important to the community that this recreation centre is maintained. For some time now there hasn't been a recreation committee to organize events in Highland Grove. However, on Monday evening Tom Harte volunteered to be the coordinator to help set up a committee.

Several people have already shown an interest in serving on the committee. With people generously giving of their time, this community project will very likely be a big success.

It's very good to have George Grant home again. He is getting along very well after his heart surgery. We hope he will be back to his old self very soon.

The roller-skating on the 29th is called "Kids' Night". They are encouraged to come in costume. There will be door prizes, and lots of fun.

The Senior swimming sponsored by the Haliburton Home Support begins in September at the PineStone Pool. On Tuesdays beginning September 8th from 9 until 10:30 and from 10:30 until noon. On Thursdays beginning on September 10th it will be from 1 until 2 p.m. Please call the Home Support for more information.

The opening of the Red Cross Outpost as a community museum was a big success. It was a pleasure to meet so many old friends who came to make this a special day. It seemed everyone had a memory to share.

Years ago, when the outpost used wood to heat, some of the boys used to go to the Outpost after school to help chop wood. But it turns out the real reason they were so ambitious was so they could sneak a smoke in the wood shed.

As a girl attending Wilberforce school, we used to take every opportunity to go and interview the nurses, just in case one of us would choose this for a career, but I don't think any one did.

Later I went to a couple of parties there, and remember these girls weren't very old, not much older than we were. They just seemed so sophisticated, they could drive cars, play piano, do mysterious medical things. The Young men didn't stand in awe of them though. Every new nurse that came along had their share of suitors. It used to be of real interest to see who accompanied the new nurse to the dance at the old Orange hall, that used to be right across the road from the Outpost. Some of these nurses left the area, but at least four young ladies married local men.

It can be seen from the displays set up inside that this building played a big part in this community at one time. The heritage guild and the many volunteers are to be congratulated on the restoration of this site and the community can now point with pride to their new museum.

Mr. and Mrs. Barclay had two special visitors last Wednesday, their grandson, John Wallace and his fiancé, Silken Laumann, two Olympic medalists. John won a gold medal rowing with a team of eight and Silken won a bronze in the single skulls. Silken also won the world championship in 1991. It was very thrilling to meet them, and Agnew's store was in all a buzz as more and more people realized we had real live celebrities here in Wilberforce and rushed to get autographs. We wish Silken the very best in the future, as she still must undergo another operation, the fifth, on her injured leg. It's not easy to win any Olympic medal, but to overcome the physical difficulties she faced is a real miracle. We thank Mr. and Mrs. Barclay for sharing their special day with us.

Stepping out. Ninety-seven seniors came from across Ontario for Bunny and Bruce Burton's second annual Line Dance Workshop at the Minden Community Centre Wednesday, sponsored by Haliburton County Home Support Services. Dancers came to the workshop to practice some old moves, and learn some new ones.

Cadet tag day fast approaching

This is our first news column, which we hope to put in weekly, to keep you informed about what is happening in our Corps.

First we should like to make you aware of our Tag day coming up on Aug. 29. Your donations will help support our Corps.

On Aug. 15, all our cadets, 21 in all, came back from the various summer camps.

Brandy Harris, Jamie Hume, Eric Kramkowski and Glen McGuire went to a two-week Basic Course. They received instruction in outdoor living, physical fitness and building of self-confidence and leadership.

Eric Harris, Nathan McDuff and John Smith went to six-week Cadet Leader at Ipperwash. This course builds leadership skills. These cadets received instruction in map using, emergency first aid and fieldcraft exercises.

Donald Mawbey, Randy and Ryan Smith and Grant Wilson went to six-week Cadet Leader Instructor at Ipperwash. This course stresses leadership and instructional skills.

Karen Aschenbrenner, David Deans, Wendy Morrison, Cheryl Moseley and Wayne Patterson completed a three-week Basic Band Course. In addition to basic training these cadets received instruction in music and instruments.

Jeremy MacDuff and Eva Wheeler went to Ipperwash for 6-1/2 weeks as staff.

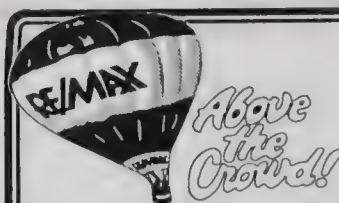

Ed Armstrong went to a six-week Wilderness Course in Petawawa. He learned about survival, physical fitness, leadership and instructional skills.

Richard Aschenbrenner and Mike Morrison went to Banff, Alberta for six weeks. They went mountain and glacier climbing, white water kayaking and they went to the Calgary Stampede.

There is no charge for any of these camps. The cadets even get $40 a week, if they attend any camp three weeks or longer.

Become a Cadet! It is free and it is fun. First cadet night Sept. 14 at 6:50 p.m. at the Haliburton Legion. For information phone: 286-3540.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Seniors' picnic proves fun

SENIOR LEAGUE
WINNIFRED BARNUM

Saturday August 8th was made much more pleasant by Eleanor Smith playing the piano for a sing-a-long. Part of it was joined by Grace Coburn helping with the singing.

Sunday, Mary Guillemain came for our reading around the tuck shop table.

My family from Peterborough, May and Roy Cameron and Jackie Yateman came and took me out for dinner, that needless to say I enjoyed. My sister is having an eye operation today.

Sunday night Chapel was taken as usual by Rev. John Burgess with Alice Jones at the organ.

Monday afternoon we held Resident's Council. Reports were given and discussed, an explanation of how our saving accounts are managed for us and how we obtain a report on our accounts was given by Beverly Pettes.

The movies were shown by Tom McAllister.

Tuesday morning service was conducted by Pastor Fast. Many of the Residents were present and wish to thank him sincerely. In the afternoon at crafts, we made leis for our Hawaiian Bingo game Friday morning.

Wednesday we had a very enjoyable picnic in Rotary Park. We were joined there by Extensicare. It was a lovely day except for a cold breeze at times. Our lunches were delicious and abundant, as we shared our lunches. After we ate as much as we could, Doris conducted a general quiz. It was surprising how much we could remember. We loaded the buses and went to Kawartha Dairy for ice cream. The Residents thank immensely all those on both busses for giving us such a happy time, and the help and care you all gave us.

The Saturday before our "Pie-fest" Janice Barnes, Linda Fry and Doris

Robertson gathered at Doris' home and they made the crust, peeled apples and cut them up, made 'eighty' pies and baked them for our Thursday pie-fest. There is no way to really thank these ladies for their efforts on our behalf (we sincerely do). Thursday at the Pie-Fest over half the pies were sold by the piece with ice cream, then nothing. We were wondering what to do with the remainder when a couple of Staff, Residents and Volunteers bought a whole pie and in no time we were sold out. Everyone was so happy as the proceeds went to the "tub fund".

Dinner honours minister

Intended for last week

On July 28th, a potluck dinner was held at St. Thomas Anglican Church on Balsam Lake Drive to bid farewell to the church assistant pastor, Barb Harmon who is going on to further her studies. Barbara has spent the past three months as assistant and has returned to Mississauga. She had been assisting the regular Minister, Rev. Susan Tate. Sympathy goes out to the family of the late Roy Hopkins, who passed away recently.

The Pinegrove Cemetery at Norland held its decoration day on Sunday, Aug. 23rd.

The annual Brohm reunion was held at Balsam Lake Provincial park on Aug. 22.

Barbara Fildey enjoyed a week at Doe Lake Provincial Camp, a Girl Guide camp near Huntsville.

Charlotte Truax of Trenton Michigan was a recent visitor of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Cameron.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Travis of Head Lake are home after a visit with their son, Bill Travis and his wife Barb a family at Flinflon Manitoba.

Rex and Pat Warr of Norwood were Sunday evening singers at the outdoor church service at I.G.A. Parking Lot.

RESCUE BREATHING: 6 BASIC STEPS

1 Shake and shout gently.
Shake the person to see if he is conscious. Ask, "Are you OK?" If there is no response:

2 Call for help and tilt the head back gently, lift the chin to open the airway.

3 Look, listen & feel. Look at the chest to see if it is rising and falling. Listen for the sound of breathing. Feel for air escaping the mouth with your hand or cheek. If you cannot see, hear or feel breathing:

4 Pinch the nose and make a seal with your mouth on the victim's mouth and give two full breaths.

5 Turn your head and look, listen and feel.

6 Give a breath every 5 seconds. Continue until someone takes over from you.

THE DOORS ARE finally open on the Red Cross Outpost Museum and there are a lot of people who are responsible for making it a success. It starts with all the volunteer labour who drywalled, plastered, stripped (wallpaper), sanded, painted, cleaned, etc. etc.; all the people who have supported us from the beginning with donations, fund raising efforts etc.; everyone who baked and prepared such wonderful goodies and sandwiches for the "apres-do" luncheon, everyone who helped on opening day with set-up, teardown and luncheon duty. The list goes on and on and on. A simple thank-you seems so inadequate but is sincerely said. All your hard work was and still is really appreciated. To everyone who joined in the opening celebrations and for all the kind words of encouragement - Thank
You. You've made it all worthwhile.
